An Anniversary Year

By Art Daley
Green Bay Packer Yearbook Editor

Anniversary time in Green Bay!

So you're five years out of high school or college. Or 25 or 30. And you've been married 10 years or 15 or 40 or even 50.

And how long ago did the Model A come forth? . . . 50 years or so. The Model T? About 60!

It seems anniversaries become important when they are attached to a "5" or a "0." Those two figures usually command a toast of some kind.

So this is a special year to hoist a brew (or whatever) to the Packers, who have gone through a whole stack of anniversary years.

This happens to be the Packers' 65th year in the National Football League. The NFL actually claims to be 66 years old since it was started under a different name in the fall of 1920 but the league didn't start to keep standings until 1921, when the Packers joined the group.

The Packers, of course, are actually starting their 67th season but those first two campaigns, 1919 and 1920, were played as an independent town team.

Thus, they've played 64 seasons for real blood and No. 65 is upon the horizon for millions of Green Bay diehards in Wisconsin and around the country.

Back in the olden days (yep, there were Model Ts parked outside the first football field), who would have thought the Packers would be alive in 1985. Even Curly Lambeau, the founder and first coach, often said he was surprised by the progress the Packers had made. He commented thusly back in the 1940s when the Packers' future wasn't all that rosy.

And during all those previous years, the Packers have hired 909 players (The Honor Roll starts on Page 21), nine head coaches and 74 assistant coaches. They've played about 1,000 league, pre-season and championship games. They've won more championships than any other team in the NFL, 11, and twice had unprecedented triple titles, 1929-31 and 1965-67.

It's interesting to capsuleize briefly the background of the Packers and because this is a "five" year let's look at the fives since the very starting decade.

What about 1925? Gad, talk about your Model T. Green Bay built a stadium that year and just finished it in time for the opener vs. the mighty Chicago Bears. The stadium had a capacity of 6,000 with seats on both sides of the field between the 30-yard lines. It was packed as the Packers gave George Halas' team a 14-10 whipping. The Packers contended for the title but faded late in the season and finished with an 8-5 record.

And then there was 1935, deep in the depression. This is the year the Packers signed the fabulous Don Hutson, who still holds a few NFL pass catching records. He still ranks as the one dominant player in the history of the Pack, having given the Pack a certain big-league quality at the time and helping the club to three championships. His catches helped beat the hated Bears twice but, alas, the Packers had trouble with the Chicago Cardinals and Detroit Lions and finished at 8-4, one game behind the titled Lions.

The wartime year of 1945 turned out to be Hutson's last and he finished by winning his ninth (of 11) pass receiving titles. He scored 29 points in a 57-21 win over Detroit. The Packer defense, always strong, started to falter that year and the Packers finished at 6-4. This was the beginning of the club's downhill spin that led to the resignation of Lambeau in 1949.

The double-five year was Coach Liz Blackbourn's second and the Packers were a pretty good looking team, featuring defense and such players as Tobin Rote, Howie Ferguson, Billy Howton, Gary Knafelc on offense. This team started with victories over the Lions and Bears and posted a 5-1 record at home. But winning on the road was a mystery, 1 and 5. The team finished with a 6-6 record, not bad compared to records of the previous years.

The season of 1965 was one of the most exciting in the club's history and turned out to be the start of Vince Lombardi's triple championship. Vince brought in Don Chandler from the New York Giants to handle the kicking and obtained Carroll Dale from the Los Angeles Rams for Dan Currie. Despite a fine 10-3-1 record the Packers found themselves tied with Don Shula's Baltimore Colts. The Packers nipped the Colts in the Division playoff on a Chandler field goal in overtime 13-10 and then downed the Cleveland Browns 23-12 in the title game.

The season of 1975 was one of great hope as the Pack's favorite son, Bart Starr, took over as head coach. It was a tough start as QB John Hadl threw 21 interceptions; John Brockington's production dropped off badly; and kicker Chester Marcol was injured. The team finished at 4-10 and it was obvious Starr had a big rebuilding job on his hands.

And now it's 1985 and all those good and bad things are just memories for the fans, the players of yesteryear, and even today's players who grew up watching the powerful Packers of the 1960s on TV.

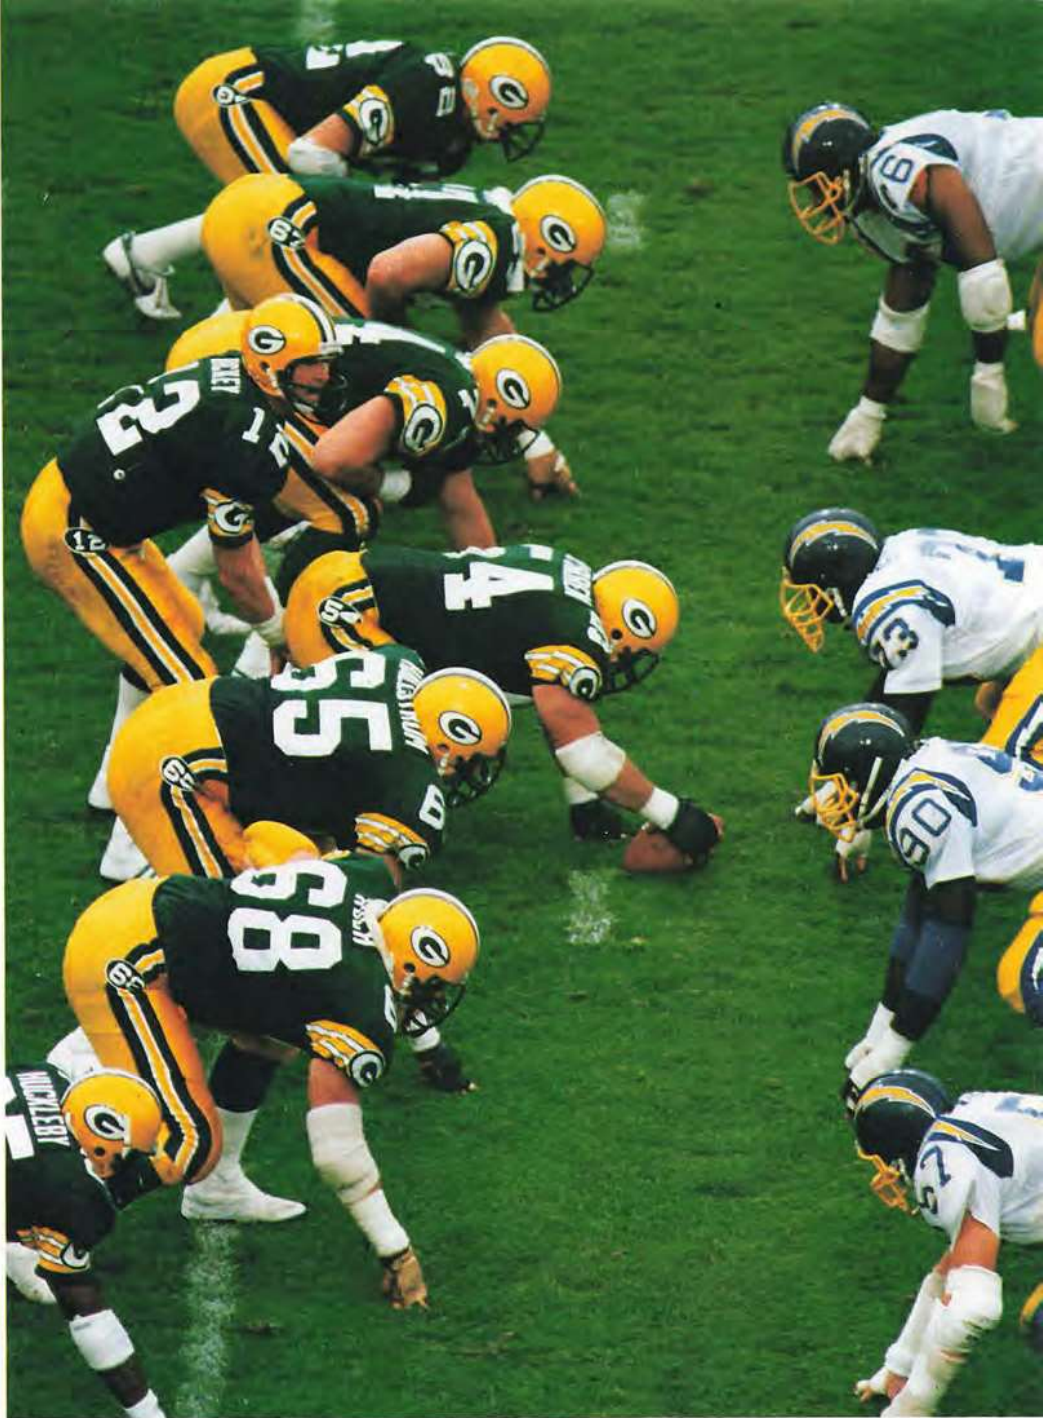

Forrest Gregg, the Packers' ninth head coach, starts his second season after a most hectic and unusual 1984 campaign. If you're new on this planet, Gregg's first team opened with a 1-7 record and then finished with 7-1 and a respectable 8-8.

And how will the Packers fare in 1985? Based on the Great Comeback of 1984, you'd have to say the Packers are on the up-swing. The various articles in the following pages of this 26th Green Bay Packer Yearbook are all positive and up-beat. But, the final record? Who knows.

Info: Curly Lambeau was coach in 1925-35-45, Liz Blackburn in 1955, Vince Lombardi in 1965 and Bart Starr in 1975. Average offensive score in 75 games was 18.5, average defensive score 15.5.

The big men on the line of scrimmage are the keys.

Put in simple terms and based perhaps on Gregg's last two college player drafts, the Packers seem to have these two objectives for 1985 — next to winning, of course:

No. 1 is to keep Lynn Dickey's uniform spotless and No. 2 is to keep the other team from scoring. It all boils down to what happens to those big men in the offensive and defensive lines. A year ago, Gregg's first draft pick was a big defensive end, Alphonso Carreker, and this year it was a big offensive tackle, Ken Ruettgers.

The offensive line is the key to the Pack's scoring success. If Dickey gets time and the running backs get a few slits, the Packers' explosive offense will be just that — explosive. If the Pack's defensive line can botch the enemy's offensive program, Green Bay stands a good chance of being highly successful. The big men are the key to victory.

Last season wasn't easy. The new coaching staff had to adjust to all the "new" players and perhaps even more difficult the veterans had to adjust to the new and different methods prescribed by the new staff. All of that has changed now. The coaches really know the athletes and the athletes know what to expect.

This new season promises to be one of the most interesting in the history of the team. These new Packers are fresh from a 7-1 binge. It could be fun in this Anniversary Year. ©

FORREST GREGG -

'A Fair Person'

*By Lee Rummel
Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations*

"The big man came in, a-huffing and a-puffing, and a-grunting and a-groaning and a-kicking, and said, 'Things are going to be different around here. Get those napkins out of here, get those soft chairs out of here, and get that carpeting off the floor.' He let people know things were going to be different."

Mike Douglass, enjoying his own performance, couldn't repress a sly smile. Holding forth at a Quarterback Club luncheon last December, he was taking obvious delight in delivering his account of Forrest Gregg's impactful arrival upon the Green Bay scene as head coach in 1984.

Amusing as it may have been to Number 53 in retrospect, it clearly had been an awe-inspiring introduction to the Packers' new leader — one that made an immediate impression on those he had come to coach. Also one that suggested a combination of Simon Legree and Captain Bligh.

Not so, says Douglass, among other Packers. Tough and demanding the Hall of Famer may be, he and they concede, the one adjective they consistently use to describe the monolithic Texan is "fair."

Continued

Forrest Gregg watches action intently in first game as Packer head coach — a 24-23 win over St. Louis Cardinals in Green Bay.

Coach Forrest Gregg signs autographs at unveiling of "The Receiver" statue at Packer Hall of Fame.

Douglass, for example, says of his coach, "I think he's a fair person. As long as you work hard and produce, he gives you a lot of credit. Some players think he's kind of mean, but that's only because they're not producing. I think that's all he's trying to get out of them. For people who are producing, he's not mean at all.

"I do think he's trying to promote more leaders on the team. He says there's only one leader — himself — but I think he wants more leaders. I think all of that promotes winning, and that's what we need."

Terry Jones, the Packers' veteran nose tackle, shares Douglass' sentiments.

"The impression Coach Gregg gives everybody is that he gives everybody a fair shake," says the soft-spoken Alabamian. "He's not going to stab anybody in the back. Last year, when I was coming off an injury, we had a lot of nose tackles in camp. He treated us equal and gave everybody an opportunity to produce — gave everybody a shot for the job.

"Everybody here feels that when you come into camp, you know you're going to have an opportunity to make the Green Bay Packers."

James Lofton, a celebrated free-thinker, concurs. "He's consistent and fair," says pro football's premier wide receiver. "He's tough, fair and direct. I don't think there are too many mysteries about him."

With Gregg, it develops, an even-handed approach is both a statement of personal philosophy and a way of life.

"I think it (being fair) really is part of my nature," he said while reflecting upon the subject in the privacy of his functional office on Lombardi Avenue. "And I think it goes back to the point of how you would like to be treated. I try to treat the players fairly. Rules are for everybody — not a different set of rules for one group and a tougher set for another one. They're equal. I try to keep that in mind in dealing with players."

Gregg readily acknowledges his experience as a player underscored to him the importance of being fair.

"As I said, I think by nature I want to be that way. I think most people really do. I think that one of the things that happened to me — maybe the first couple of years that I was playing professional football — had an effect on my approach. From what I saw, I didn't think the rules applied to everybody. Some players were treated better than others. Some people absorbed the brunt of the attack. Other people making the same mistakes, and who had the same lack of production, were forgiven. That may have been because of the position they played, or because of whatever.

"I think that one of the things that I most admired about Vince Lombardi is that I thought he was extremely fair. And I think as far as discipline was concerned, and violations of the rules, I thought he painted everybody with the same brush. There was nothing wishy-washy about him, and I had a great admiration of that.

"I know that the first year that he was here in Green Bay — the first day I was in practice with him — there was a ball player I had never heard a coach raise a voice to in the two years I'd been with him. He gave less than his best and it resulted in about a 10-minute oration from Vince. And I thought that was something that was very interesting."

So committed is Gregg to equality for all that he makes it a statement of policy whenever camp opens.

"I think this is one of the few businesses where politics are not involved," he told his players during initial remarks the day 1985's first mini-camp began. "I don't care if you're a first round draft choice or a free agent who just walked in off the street, you're all equal in my eyes."

Later, elaborating on this statement, he delineated his philosophy with characteristic clarity.

"As a football coach, with a 45-man roster, I want the 45 best football players I can get. I don't really care where they come from. I can draft 'em, I can sign 'em as free agents, they can walk in off the street or they can already be here. I don't really care.

"If our club is structured like this — in other words, the player limit is 45 — I am going to keep the eight best offensive linemen that I have. I don't care — I don't have to make anything good. The only thing I have to do," he added with impressively basic logic, "is win. And I'm not going to win by trying to make a draft good, or trying to change people. I want the best that is there. I want the four best wide receivers — whether they're here already, or we're going to pick 'em up from some other team that waived 'em, or what have you. And that's exactly how I feel about it."

An essential element in this equation, Gregg admits, is quality of contribution. He puts it succinctly, "Either you produce or you're out."

Do his players understand this?

"I think they do," he averred. "I think that there have been people who have left here that other players maybe were fond of, but that has nothing to do with it. I've let players go that I dearly loved — I mean players that I had a very, very high regard for — for the type of person they were. But when it gets right down to the bottom line: How good a football player are they? Can we win with them?

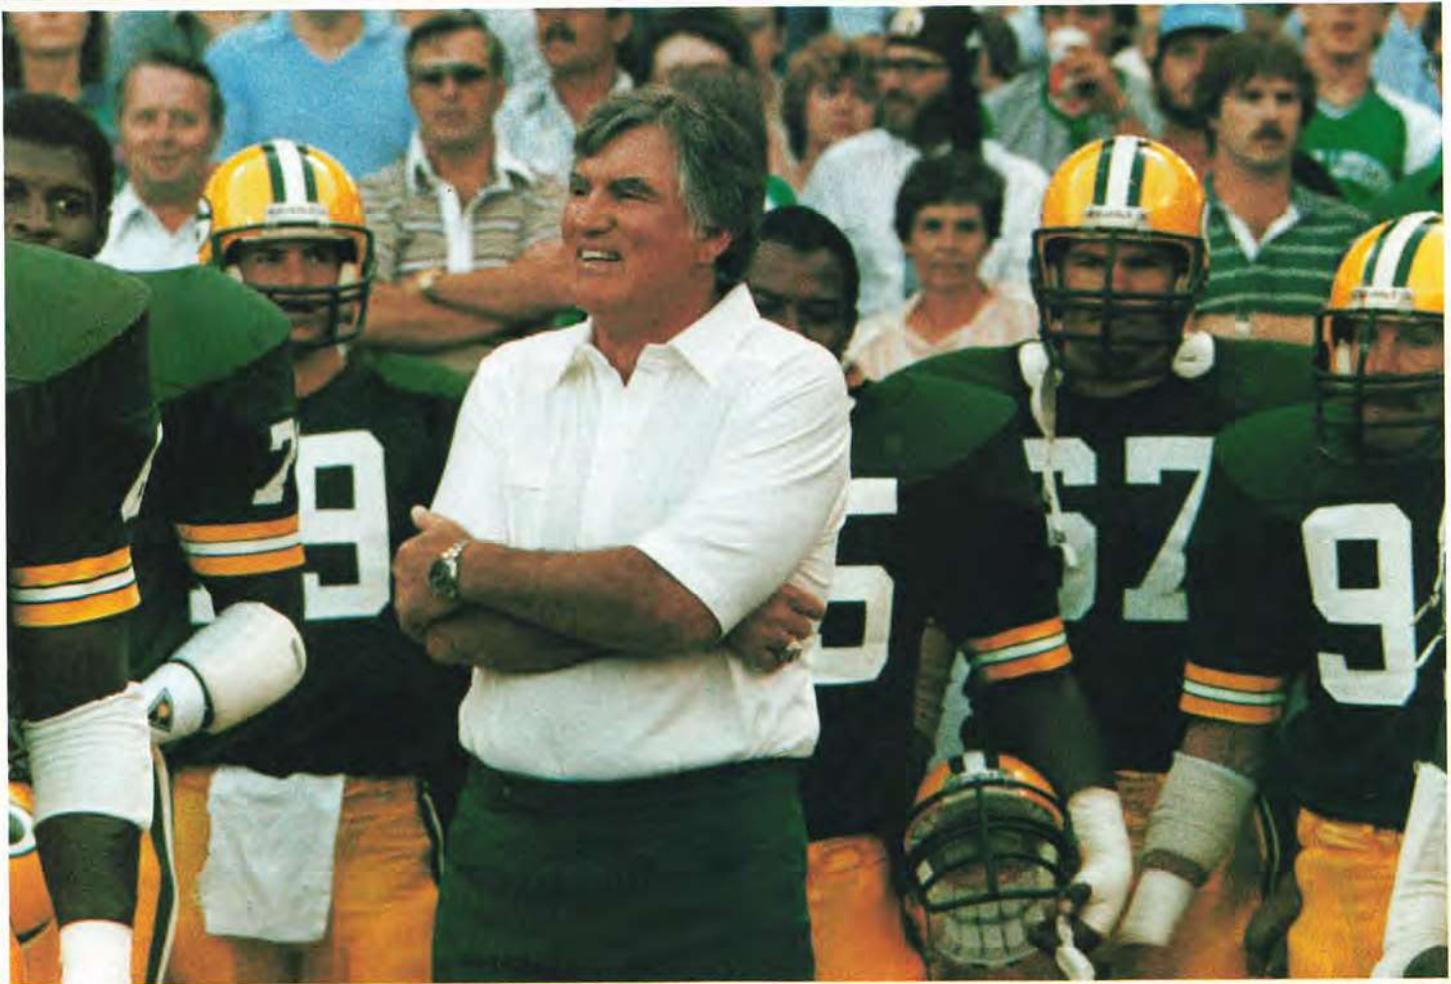

"The character of the player is also involved in this scenario. If I've got two players equal, and one of them has better character than the other, I'll keep the character guy, because I know that I can depend on him."

Gregg admits to being a disciplinarian but is quick to note, "I don't think I'm rigid. I don't feel like I have to necessarily express myself everyday, along those lines. But I think there are times when things need to be pointed out, and I will do that."

On the other side of the coin — in keeping with his reputation for fairness he has been described by one of his former Cincinnati players as "compassionate."

Asked if he felt this was an accurate appraisal, Forrest rejoined, "I hope so. I hope so. You get a feeling for your players, particularly those you have been with for a number of years, and those people that produce for you, and you certainly have a fondness for. And when something happens to one of them in their personal life, then you do what you can to help them."

The same player labeled the 51-year-old native of Birthright, Texas "a player's coach." From his perspective, Gregg finds it difficult to evaluate this description.

"I don't know if I am or not," he says. "That's hard for me to say. The only thing I do know is I probably treat these players the same way that I would like to be treated. As a player, I always wanted to know where I stood, and I appreciated playing for those people where there was no guesswork involved. Because, if you don't know what a coach wants, then you can't give him what he wants. From that respect, maybe so."

It may be surprising to some but he also has been characterized as a "funny man."

Laughing as he pondered this point, Gregg said, "You mean, do I have a sense of humor? I think that there are times for levity. And as I say, I don't feel I'm rigid. I don't think that I'm the same every day. I don't think anybody is. I think there are days when you feel good, or if there is a funny incident, I don't mind seeing people laugh."

"I think that you really must enjoy the work you do. I personally enjoy this business. I hope that the players enjoy playing professional football. I think that they understand that this is not an easy business — that this is a tough business. That you may have a friend here today and, tomorrow, he may be gone. But that is the nature of the business. So, you know, if you can have some fun in doing the thing that you enjoy most and, at the same time, be productive, I don't see anything wrong with that."

Was he suggesting a sense of humor is important to coaching success?

"I think a sense of humor is important to survive in life, period," Gregg chuckled.

As a leader, he has well defined opinions on how leaders originate. "I think it's a combination of factors," he says. "I think it has a lot to do with your attitude, and what you want out of life. Some people do not want to be in a position of leadership. Other people have a great desire to be in a position of leadership. That has always been my desire."

Does he feel he was meant to lead?

"I don't know. That's hard for me to say. But I've always felt that I didn't want to be the average guy. I felt like I had a drive that made me want to do something above the average, and I hope that I will succeed. I have as a player; I have, in some sense, as a coach. I have not reached what I really desire to reach as a coach, at this point."

Gregg, now in his ninth year as a head coach in the NFL, admits he would like to see more leadership develop among his players.

"I think that's important. I think it's necessary. I can't be everywhere at once. I can't be everywhere on the field, I can't be in every coach's meeting. I think we have some leaders on this football team, and I've tried to seek those people out, not necessarily seek them out to talk to them, but try to figure out who they were, and I think I have. I think it's important that you have leadership from within the team, and I think it's also important that those people who lead within the team have the same desires that you have, because there are a lot of people who are leaders who are negative in their approach and I think that can be very bad for a football team. It can be bad for an organization, it can be bad for a family. When you see someone that you feel has that potential, then what you try to do is put them in positions of leadership as much as you can. And you try to make sure that those people that you try to put into those positions have the same goals that you have."

As a coach, Gregg's leadership is symbolized by his all-out approach to football team, you can't relax, because they have the same abilities that you have. If you score 30 points in the first half, that team has the same potential. In this league, things can change in a hurry. So I really believe if you get a lead, I don't think you can ever afford to nurse that lead."

During the Packers' seven-game losing streak in the first half of 1984's season, Gregg had observed, "Everywhere I've been, the first year has been a struggle."

Casting about for an explanation of this pattern, he says, "maybe as much as anything is getting used to me. That may be the reason. I don't know. I know that in the first head coaching job I had, in Cleveland, it was two things. One was probably getting accustomed to me, the other thing is that we lacked talent."

The Packer coach didn't mention it, but those first year struggles were followed by second year success — a 9-5 record and "Coach of the Year" honors at Cleveland in 1976 and a 12-4 record and a trip to Super Bowl XVI in 1981 at Cincinnati.

Based on that experience, it was suggested, 1985 figures to be a good year.

"I can't make any promises there," Gregg declares. "But I do have a lot of hopes for the Green Bay Packers in 1985. I think that we have a good football team. If we can stay healthy and improve our football team as much as I think we have, then we certainly have a chance of having an excellent year."

He is convinced his players are committed to this objective.

"I think the attitude of this football team coming into our final mini-camp was what I had hoped for," he said. "I knew that there were going to be certain people that would come up short. But, on the whole, I think that there is a great attitude. I think there is one of confidence but, at the same time, knowing that things don't just happen because you want them to happen."

"I think if you ask any player who plays football — 'Do you want to win?' I think every player wants to win. But the difference is that there are people that want to win that won't pay the price to win. There are people who want to win and who WILL pay the price to win. I think that's what our players have come to realize."

There is, of course, little question about his objective.

"I know what we want for this team," he said, measuring his words for emphasis. "I think that the players know what we want. And that is to be a champion."

players know what we want,
and that is to be winning, according to one of his former Bengal players, Pat McNally. His favorite phrase at Cincinnati, McNally noted, was "when you get a possum down, you put your foot on his neck and you yank on his tail."

Addressing this subject, the Packer coach explained, "I don't think there's ever any time to relax. The game is too intense and the situations are too volatile for you ever to relax in a football game. I think it's dangerous for a player to relax in a football game, once he's on the field. When he's on the sideline, that's a different story. But when he's on the field, I don't think you ever relax."

"I think our players understand that and, you know, if two teams are battling evenly — and if the talent is fairly equal — then that team that can keep that intensive edge for the 60 minutes is going to win the ball game. And I don't think there's ever any time to let down and coast. If you get ahead of a

Tom Flynn — the Free Safety.

MURPHY and FLYNN - Safties First

By Vic Feuerherd
The Milwaukee Sentinel

If scouting for professional football players were the exact science so many would like to believe it is, then Tom Flynn would be somewhere in the Pittsburgh, Pa., area as a rookie investment broker; Mark Murphy would be in nearby Canton, Ohio, putting a business degree to use, and the Green Bay Packers would still be searching for the last line of defense in their quest for a spot in the National Football League playoffs.

Thankfully, though, at least for the Packers' sake, scouts can run their stopwatches silly and burn out the bulbs in their projectors and still come up short in measuring what it takes to be a professional football player. Or so this Packer regime knew in the case of Flynn, and the previous Packer staff discovered in the case of Murphy. As a result, the Packers have the foundation of a defense they hope will carry them to NFL fame and glory over the next few seasons.

"They've got a year in our system now, a year as experienced defensive backs," said Ken Riley, the Packer secondary coach who as a sixth-round draft pick produced Hall of Fame credentials for 15 years with the Cincinnati Bengals.

"I know what they're capable of doing, and I think they know what to expect from me. More important, they know what to expect from themselves.

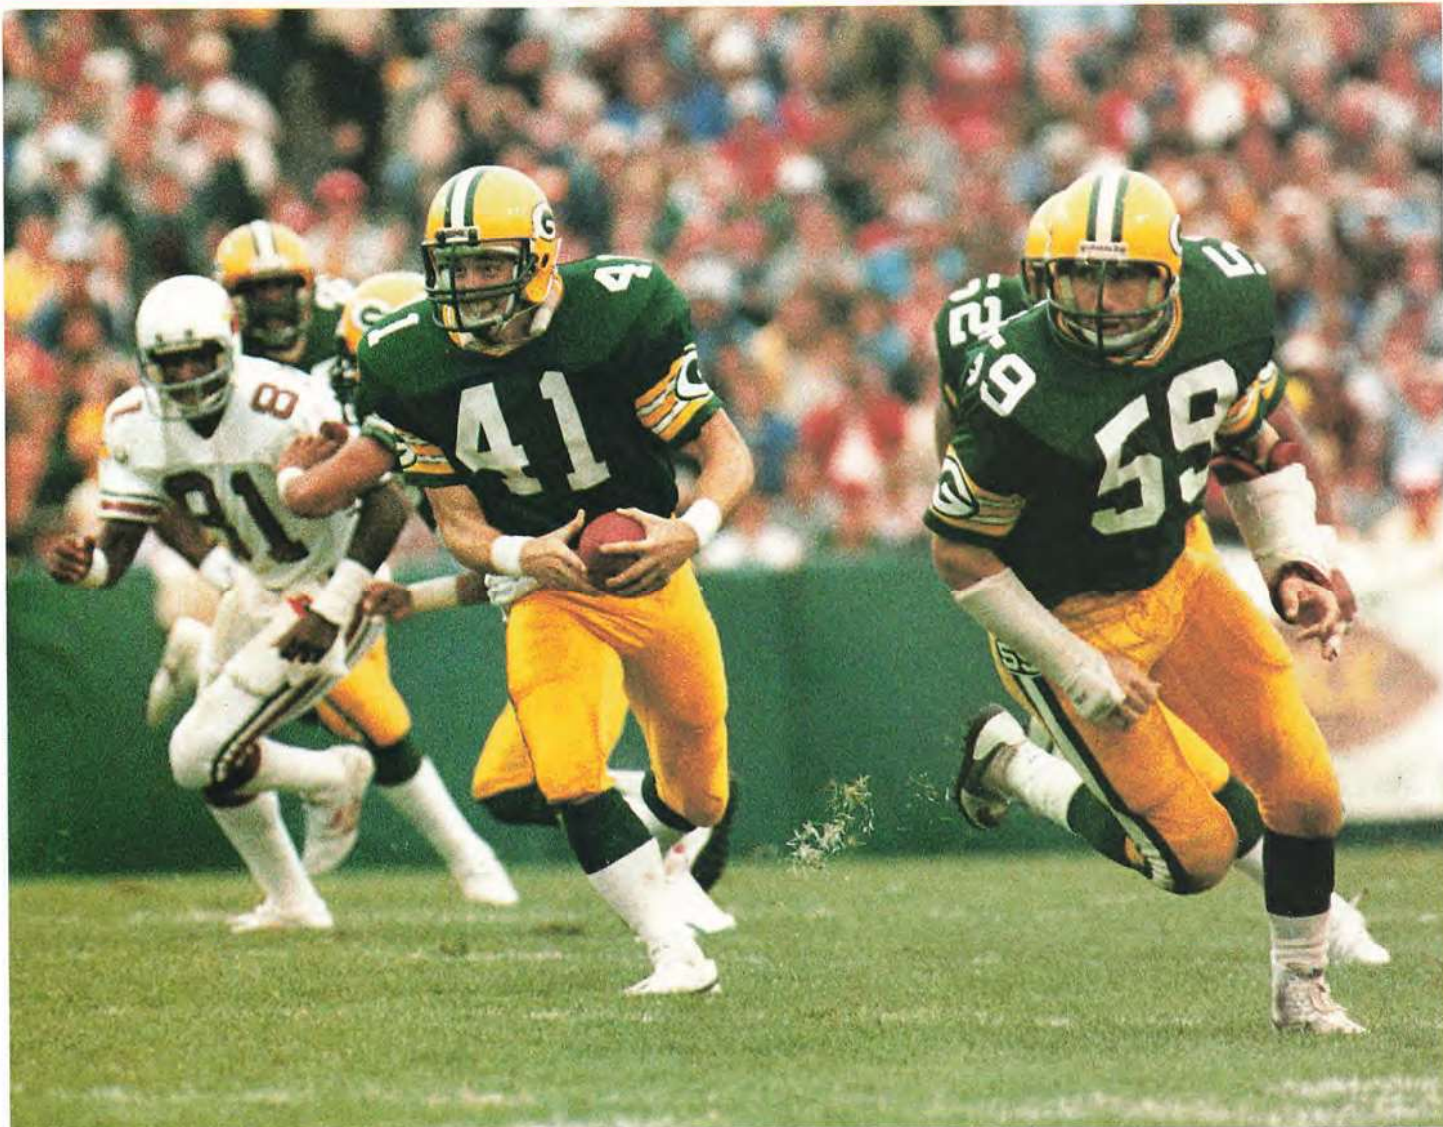

"I can't see them getting anything but better."

Last July, Tom Flynn had the kind of face that made him appear as if he just walked off the streets of Dublin — a soft, sad, forlorn look that one could easily read as being fearful of this new and exciting adventure called professional football. There he was on the Packers' Oneida Street practice field, a surprisingly low fifth-round draft choice immediately thrown into the No. 1 free safety position, the new quarterback of the Packers' young and questionable defensive backfield.

Admittedly, he was somewhat timid facing his new surroundings. "It was a tough adjustment," Flynn recalled, "not only to play in the National Football League, but just to get used to the people around me."

Others noticed, too. "He probably doesn't feel too comfortable with the role because he's the rook," head coach Forrest Gregg said after a grueling practice session under the broiling sun. "But feeling comfortable comes with understanding the mental part."

"Like any other rookie, he was quiet," Mark Murphy recalled. "It was a beginning for him. But once he knew what he was doing back there, he started opening up."

Eventually, the understanding came. Either that, or Flynn deserves an Oscar for fooling every serious and casual observer of Packer football.

Nine interceptions. Rookie defensive player of the year in the National Football Conference. Self-proclaimed garbage man — a touchdown saving tackle here, a tipped pass there.

"He's going to be a helluva free safety in the league," said Packer receiver coach Lew Carpenter, after watching his receivers go nose to nose with Flynn every day in practice. "He's the quickest I've ever seen at getting to the ball."

At the other safety stands Mark Murphy, whose bald pate gives him the appropriate fearsome look for the brutal job he has, but which belies the ever affable, outgoing personality with the ready-made smile.

Though a four-year veteran, Murphy in effect still was a rookie to the Packers' ever-vigilant first-year coaching staff. Though technically a starter, he was faced with proving himself all over again.

"I watched a lot of film on him before last season and I noticed right away that he was a very intense player," Riley said. "In fact, I was afraid he might be too intense because I noticed that sometimes he had problems coming down after games, so to speak. But you could see right away that he was a good tackler, that he had decent speed and that he had good range.

"The knock on him was that he was not the complete pass coverage guy you need at strong safety. But I think he proved that he is a pretty complete player."

Complete enough to lead the Packer defense in tackles last season. Complete enough to act as a fourth or fifth linebacker in certain defensive schemes. Complete enough to go head to head with bigger, stronger and faster tight ends without giving up an inch. Complete enough to chip in one interception and a team leading 15 pass deflections.

"He was something from the start," Flynn remembered.

The rap on Flynn was that he was too slow — too slow to stay with speedy wide receivers in man-to-man coverage, too slow to make that instantaneous adjustment to a receiver's pass route. Too slow. Too slow. And too slow.

This evaluation flew in the face of Flynn's proven track record. He was a winner as a high school quarterback in the Pittsburgh area. He was a winner at the University of Pittsburgh, where he was a four-year defensive starter with one of the nation's top college teams.

Stopwatches, though, don't measure the real player. That's why Flynn was still available when the Packers came around to making their fifth-round selection in the 1984 college draft.

Riley knew he had something special the second the Packers plucked Flynn from the ranks.

He's intelligent, with the gift of great anticipation," Riley explained. "He has that knack for being around the ball. That's something you can't teach. You either have it or you don't.

"And when I looked back at Tom's past, you could see he had been a winner wherever he had been. Every step he took, he was successful."

It wasn't too long before all of Riley's expectations were realized.

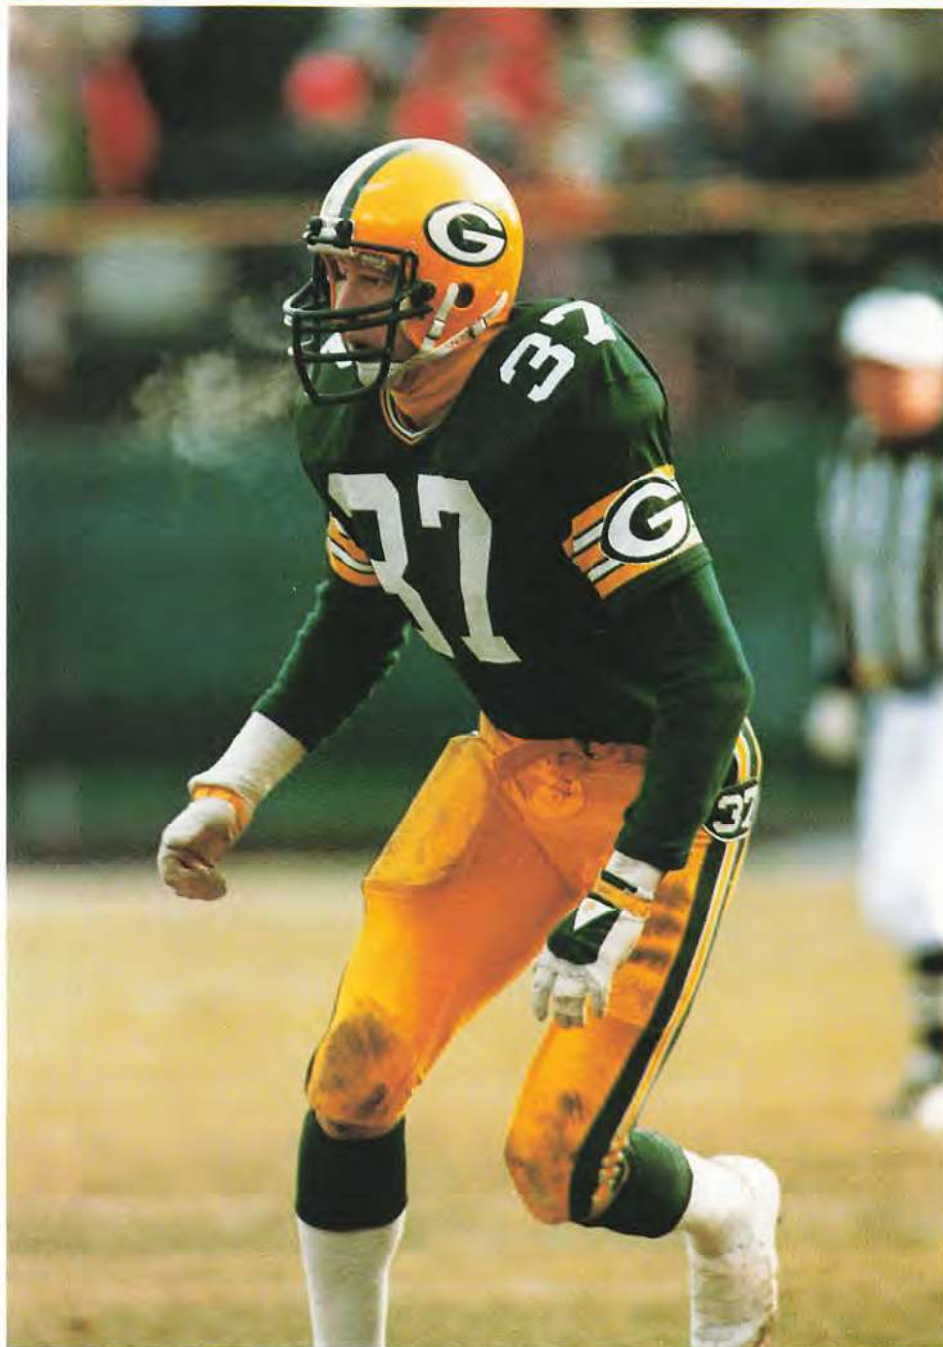

"He's so smooth back there, and when I say smooth I always think of Paul Warfield," Riley said, referring to the Hall of Fame receiver who played for the Cleveland Browns and Miami Dolphins in the '60s and '70s. "There are certain people who have the knack for making everything look easy. Tom makes everything look easy."

But making things look easy doesn't necessarily come without a struggle, at least on the inside. It wasn't simply the pressure of being the No. 1 free safety without having played a down. "That was more an incentive than pressure," Flynn said. "Once you've got something, it's a lot easier to hold on to it than trying to beat some veteran out of a job. It's always nice to know you have something. It helps keep you a little more relaxed."

What did take time, though, was learning the movements and tendencies of his defensive backfield teammates, a job made easier by the fact that his former Pitt teammate, Tim Lewis, was at one of the cornerback spots.

"As time went on, I got to know what Murph and (cornerback) Mark Lee would do in certain situations. The better I got to know them, the more comfortable I got," Flynn explained.

"At first Murph was taking care of the whole secondary because he knew all the calls. Gradually, the more familiar I became with the system, the more I started taking care of the corners and Murph would take care of the linebackers.

Mark Murphy gets set to make tackle. He led Packers with 94 tackles in 1984.

"Not too many people realize how important the linebackers are in zone coverage, and we play mostly zone. So Murph helped a great deal in getting me through all this."

The Packers helped ease the transition, too. They helped wipe away all the comments and criticisms that claimed Flynn had not played up to par in his senior year at Pitt. "When I came here, the Packers weren't concerned about anything that happened my senior year. Once you put on the pads, that was all they were concerned about," Flynn said.

Flynn's the first to admit that he doesn't possess the blazing speed usually associated with a member of a defensive backfield, but he's not about to admit he's slow, let alone too slow to do the job. He's aware that there are other aspects of his game that help him make up for any lost yards in his pursuit of a quarterback's pass.

"I have pretty good vision of the field," he said. "I can see a lot of things from the corner of my eye, and I'm able to keep an eye on the quarterback, too. Once I see the quarterback's ready to throw, I make my break."

Some of that is the natural ability Riley speaks of. But that ability must first be defined and then refined in practice after practice. For three years he had one of the best to help him develop his knack. Flynn used to work against a quarterback named Marino, who has since gone on to a certain amount of fame and glory for the Miami Dolphins.

"I learned every day in college with Dan Marino to get rid of any false steps I might have in my coverage," Flynn said. "The coaching staff at Pitt stressed getting rid of false steps all the time, and working with Marino, who's got that quick release, made me all the better at it.

"If you don't have any false steps in your break to the ball, your reaction time is that much quicker. It's more or less reaction time back there. Once you stop your feet, you're dead."

The refining process continued in practice. Flynn came to the Packers expecting to have to learn the gamut of secondary play. He learned he had a job to do, no one else's. The rest of it all fell into place.

"I always thought I was a disciplined player, but Coach Riley taught me all about discipline. He was able to tell us what was expected of us, especially me. What I found out was a whole lot different than what I thought I might have to do.

"I thought — probably because this was the NFL — that I would have to do a lot more than maybe I was capable of doing or knew how to do. But Ken made it easier for me. He convinced me that I didn't have to worry about doing someone else's job.

"All I had to concentrate on doing was my job."

Murphy has always fought the odds and won, so why should it have come as a surprise to anyone that the strong safety from tiny West Liberty State in Virginia would make the Packers in 1981.

As a rookie free agent in 1980, Murphy had been the beneficiary of a very good break — he broke a wrist in training camp. The break forced the Packers to keep him on the injured reserve list for all but the last game of the regular season. At the same time, the break allowed Murphy to grasp the fundamentals and techniques of the pro game. "It gave me the time I needed to catch up to the other guys," Murphy said.

Over the next two seasons he imbedded himself on the Packer roster. In 1984, he firmly entrenched himself in the starting lineup. It was just another surprise in a career that has been chock full of surprises.

Murphy hails from football crazy Canton, home of the Pro Football Hall of Fame. As a senior in high school, he was a tough, little defensive back who attracted little, if any, attention from the football schools who haunt the playing fields of Canton. But West Liberty, where his older brother was playing, was interested. It was a surprise in itself that anybody was interested.

"At that time I never thought about playing pro. But I did want to go to college," Murphy said. "And I needed some kind of scholarship because my parents couldn't afford to send me.

"I wasn't exactly big coming out of high school. Some friends and I were just looking back at some of our old high school pictures. Remember those ads that show starving kids and say, 'Send money so this boy can eat?' Well, my friends use to say that about me all the time.

"I was probably about 165 pounds coming out of high school, and maybe I was 5-foot-7. And I really didn't have the kind of speed the major colleges were looking for. But I grew four inches and gained 20 pounds in my freshman year. I started for four years."

That kind of zealous determination was learned early, and it was a lesson he has never forgotten. He still takes just a few weeks off after the regular season before getting right back into the regimen for the upcoming season. "If I miss a day of working out, I feel guilty," he said, "and I hate to feel guilty."

Murphy's determination and drive has its roots in an upsetting incident when he was 8 years old. A mysterious ailment robbed him of all his hair. It left him with his current trademark — but it was different then.

"Most kids are energetic and let everything out," he said, "but I used to keep everything bottled up inside of me. I still don't understand what happened, but my hair started falling out for about a year.

"At first, being bald was a big adjustment for me. It bothered me for a couple of years. There were some rough times. There always seemed to be a couple of guys I was scuffling with.

"They say it may or may not grow back. But if I woke up some morning with hair on my head I probably wouldn't recognize myself. I'd probably shave it off. It's my trademark now."

Murphy's current business is tight ends and pulling offensive linemen. Strong safeties are as run oriented as they are pass oriented. A strong safety's primary pass responsibility is one-on-one coverage of the tight end, the unenviable job of going up against some of the best athletes in the NFL. His run responsibility can work several ways. When he's not taking care of the offensive interference for the linebackers, the linebackers are wiping out the blockers so Murphy can make the tackle. That's one reason why Murphy ended up with 94 unassisted tackles, tops on a team filled with accomplished tacklers.

"At times, we run a special defense that has me right up on the head of the tight end. There were four linebackers and me, so I guess I was the fifth linebacker," Murphy said. "But it depends on whom we're playing, and the game plan dictates how many times we're going to use it."

Strong safety is the type of position that provides the chance for the big hit, something Murphy relishes. "I like to describe myself as controlled, but it's a position where you have to be intense," he said.

"You're always taking on people who are bigger than you. But it's the kind of position where you can set the tone for a game. A big hit lifts people. There's nothing better than going out there and really popping someone.

"I want to be intense, but controlled. I don't want to go out there flying around out of control. It certainly doesn't do you any good if you're so intense that you're flying around but you end up missing a tackle. Being aggressive is the best way to describe it."

Murphy had good reason to be aggressive when he arrived at his first training camp in the summer of 1980. He knew he was at a disadvantage against players from bigger named schools. "Small colleges play good football, yet they don't have the kind of money needed to pump into a program or have the Woody Hayes or Bear Bryant type of coaches. So I was below everybody," he remembered.

"Maybe guys who are drafted in the first few rounds don't worry about making the team, but it always was on my mind. It was unbelievable — me playing pro football. I believed I belonged there, but I still had to pinch myself.

"By the end of my first year, when I got over the broken wrist, and then when I came back for the second year, I really noticed the improvement. I could feel it in everything I did."

"The free safety and strong safety have to be very close," Riley was saying. "In our scheme of things they both have to be very knowledgeable.

They both have to be able to call defenses.

"The have to work together. If they don't, it's almost impossible for the other guys to do their jobs."

Flynn learned the lesson of teamwork early. You don't survive as the ninth of 10 children, otherwise. "It's been nothing but a help, a big help,"

Flynn said about his family. "I guess I really play for them as opposed to playing for myself. I make sure I do my best on every play because I know when I see them after the game they'll be all over me for the one I messed up.

"I think they enjoy my playing more than I do."

Then, the Flynn clan doesn't have to take and dish out the hits like Tom and Mark have to do.

Now there's the start of a family in the Packer defensive backfield, and two of its most important members are Murphy and Flynn. And like any other family, time tells the real story. The better they get to know each other, the better the performance.

"It's a unique situation, a real good situation," Murphy says. "Tom plays so well, he's a real rangy player.

"There are probably some people who are faster than us, but we've got real good instincts that mesh well. We cover a lot of ground.

"And we got pretty good as the year went on last season. We started feeling more comfortable, more relaxed, so we were able to do more things back there. It was a growing process."

A growing process that the Packers can only hope continues to grow and grow. ☺

What is the Kellogg Quarterback Club?

The Kellogg Quarterback Club is a fun and interesting program that enables you to meet and have lunch with the Green Bay Packers.

When does the Kellogg Quarterback Club meet?

Noon luncheons are held every Tuesday, the players' day off. The meeting place is the Lombardi Room at Peyton's, 780 Packer Drive. Occasionally, the location may be changed for special presentations — to be announced.

How Can I Make Reservations?

Reservations are open to the public and can be made by calling 433-3074. Seating is limited and there is a 10% discount for season tickets or reservations of 10 or more.

Paul and Amy Coffman toast a new life after their wedding May 4.

NOW MARRIED - Paul Coffman Is

*By Don Langenkamp
Green Bay Press-Gazette*

It could be a portrait painted by Norman Rockwell, or a success story penned by Horatio Alger:

Smalltown boy from the Kansas Grain Belt struggles against great odds to achieve fame and fortune, then returns to his home state to marry his campus sweetheart.

Yes, the football saga of Paul Coffman smacks of the American Dream — how an unsung country boy strived and pushed himself through a gauntlet of gridiron challenges beginning in tiny Chase, Kan., and culminating in Honolulu, Hawaii, where he has played in the National Football League's Pro Bowl the past three years.

The tale is as uncomplicated as Coffman himself, as basic as his down-home, rugged countenance with the baby blue eyes and golden-wheat shock of curly hair. It could be summed up this way: Average physical attributes greatly elevated by burning desire and an unshakeable work ethic.

But there is another dimension to Coffman as he enters his eighth season as a pro, now a fixture as the Green Bay Packers' tight end and one of the premier performers at that demanding position in football's realm. In early May, Coffman deserted bachelorhood to marry the former Amy Allen of Kansas City. And, as he girds for his personal goals of another Pro Bowl berth and a Super Bowl ring to add to his wedding band, it seems to be with added maturity.

"I've sowed my wild oats and done what I've wanted to do," says Coffman. "I haven't cheated life any. What I want to do now is settle down and raise a family."

Then he jokingly adds, "Hopefully, it won't affect my play any. Guys tell me when you're lean and mean and hungry and on the street, you'll play harder. This will definitely keep me home more."

Coffman met his bride-to-be four years ago on the Kansas State campus. In his dogged style, he had returned to school each of his first three years as a pro to complete work for his degree in milling science, which essentially covers everything from commodities to types of flour in the grain industry.

"I met Amy during my last year back at K-State," he says. "We got engaged in January and married in May."

Characteristically, Coffman's courtship included a 10-day visit to rugged, no-nonsense Australia following the Pro Bowl in Honolulu. And then it was back to the routine he has etched into his lifestyle since his high school days in Chase.

"In February, I start to feel like I have to be doing something," says Coffman. "If I don't work out for awhile, I really start feeling bad. So I'll do some running and distance work and then start in on my weightlifting by the middle of February."

His schedule resembles that of a hyperactive blacksmith. From February through mid-June, he spends four hours a day, four days a week running and lifting weights at the Kansas City Chiefs complex in Arrowhead Stadium. The Coffmans bought a home in Lees Summit, MO., next to a lake and only 10 minutes from Arrowhead.

Packer quarterback Lynn Dickey lives in the area and occasionally works out with Coffman. A more regular sweat-and-groan companion is former Kansas State teammate, line-backer Gary Spani, now with the Chiefs.

But for the most part, Coffman is a solitary profile of masochism. "I'll stick with the four hours a day, four days a week until about four weeks before camp starts," he says. "Then I'll step it up to six hours a day."

Since his days at Chase High School, he has accepted the fact that he was almost constantly on a football proving ground. He came from one of the smallest high schools in the state.

"There's just about 600 people in the whole town," he says. "There were about 100 kids in high school when I was there and I had 24 in my graduating class. We barely had enough guys on the football team to hold a scrimmage."

Still, the son of a high school science teacher and farmer, Robert Coffman, excelled to the point where he was invited to the Shriners All-Star Game in Kansas City.

"I went up there and got to play both offense and defense," he recalls. "I was the only guy on our team that did that. We had guys from the big schools like Wichita on our team and I guess I wasn't really that impressed. I thought they would be just awesome."

Coffman's stellar performance in that game may have turned a few heads, but the scholarship offers didn't exactly begin pouring in. "Mostly junior colleges," he says. "All I got from the major schools was post cards. But then Kansas State asked me to come up and try it as a walk-on and I thought that was quite an honor. My dad and grandpa had graduated from there."

The rest, of course, is a well-chronicled string of successes. The walk-on became a free agent and then a mainstay on the Packer roster. Now, heading into the 1985 season, he needs three receptions to move ahead of Carroll Dale into sixth place on the all-time Packer receiving list. His 31st reception would nudge him past Billy Howton into fifth place at 304 career catches.

Coffman has turned into something of a hot scorer in the past two years when he counted 20 touchdowns, including nine in the injury-shortened 1984 season. For his career he has scored 33 touchdowns — an average of seven per season, not counting his first season when he played only on special teams.

He easily ranks as the best of the Packers' tight ends, ranking well ahead of his predecessors at the relatively new position. The other tight ends listed among the Top Twenty receivers are Gary Knafe, Ron Kramer, Rich McGeorge and Boyd Dowler, who also was a flanker.

But the niche he has carved in this elite company has not caused Coffman to turn his back on his home state. Aside from a brief postseason hiatus on a sunny beach somewhere in the world each year, he is a fixture in Kansas.

When Robert and Madeline Coffman greet the prodigal son, it is without fanfare. The same goes for the community of Chase.

"That's why I like going back home," he says in his direct manner. "All my old friends treat me the same. Sometimes you have to explain to people that football's my business — it's what I do best. But it doesn't make me any better than anybody else."

His leisure time activities mirror his craving for physical activity.

"There are some things I do that aren't very good to say as far as football is concerned," he chuckles. "I go downhill skiing in Colorado every year. I just bought a moto-cross motorcycle and I've been riding that a lot. I'm not very good at golf, but I enjoy it."

He traverses his home state, recruiting high school talent for Kansas State, appearing at fund-raisers and benefit golf tournaments for his alma mater.

But mostly, he is a football man, pure and simple. He wears the mantle of stardom as easily as he would have worn a battered leather helmet minus a facemask if he had been born into the game several generations earlier.

He is still proving himself to the sternest taskmaster of all — Paul Coffman. And marriage and mellowing aside, he remains — in his own words — lean and mean and hungry.

For Paul Coffman, there is no other way. ☺

NOSTALGIA

Love Helped Packers Of The 1960s Win

By Art Daley

Green Bay Packer Yearbook Editor

What really made the Packers of the 1960s go?

Talent? Sure they had plenty of it but so did a lot of other teams. Fat paychecks? Not really. They were well paid but nothing out of the ordinary.

Coaching? They did have Vince Lombardi. And they had an edge on other teams there.

How could they win five championships in seven years, including three straight. That kind of dominance has not been duplicated since and probably never will.

What was it? What made the Packers such an exception?

The answer might be a four-letter word — LOVE.

In this particular day and age, the 1980s, that is, a lot of folks might scoff at that ... But read on:

The Green Bay Chapter, NFL Alumni held its first Charity Celebrity Golf tournament on the weekend of the Packer-Charger game in Lambeau Field Oct. 7, 1984. Members of the Packers' first Super Bowl team were invited back to serve as the celebrities.

You wouldn't believe all the hugging and kissing that went on when the players filtered into their motel the Saturday before the game. More than one pair of glasses were broken or bent.

They were like a big bunch of kids the day of the Packer-Charger game as they wore their own jerseys and were introduced before the game. And so it went during the big banquet that night and the golf tournament the next day.

Dick Schaap, the ABC sports commentator who observed the Packers during the 1960s as a sportswriter, conducted a segment on the TV program, 20/20, about the Packers of the 1960s, the first Super Bowl team and the Celebrity weekend.

Schaap voiced during a projection of Lombardi in action: "They were the Packers of Green Bay, Wisconsin. They were the Packers of Vince Lombardi. And long before they played in the first Super Bowl, they were a special team.

"The fierceness of their coach combined with the smallness of their city to force upon them a cohesiveness, a comradeship, a closeness that, nurtured by victory, came very close to love."

Jerry Kramer, one of the Pack's "guardian angels" along with Fuzzy Thurston, put Schaap's thinking this way:

"The kind of a thing you feel for a family member, for a brother, a sister, a mother. It's the feeling we had for each other, for the other members of the team and for Coach Lombardi. The thing that will last forever, I guess."

Okay, the players had a lot of love for each other. Did that help 'em win?

Let's go right to the top for an answer — Lombardi, himself.

Vince probably wouldn't have revealed himself in this "love" vein publicly but he did express himself thusly in a private dinner with Lee Iacocca, then president of Ford Motor Company, several months before he died Oct. 1, 1970.

Iacocca, now president of Chrysler Corporation, quoted Lombardi in his book, "IACOCCA, An Autobiography,"* on Vince's formula for success in a chapter on The Key to Management.

Iacocca wrote: "What he told me that evening applies as much to the business world as it does to sports." Here's how Lombardi was quoted:

"You have to start by teaching the fundamentals. A player's got to know the basics of the game and how to play his position. Next, you've got to keep him in line. That's discipline. The men have to play as a team, not as a bunch of individuals. There's no room for prima donnas.

"But there have been a lot of coaches with good ball clubs who know the fundamentals and have plenty of discipline but still don't win the game. Then you come to the third ingredient: if you're going to play together as a team, you've got to care for one another. You've got to love each other.

"Each player has to be thinking about the next guy and saying to himself: 'If I don't block that man, Paul is going to get his legs broken. I have to do my job well in order that he can do his.'

"The difference between mediocrity and greatness is the feeling these guys have for each other. Most people call it team spirit. When the players are imbued with that special feeling you know you've got yourself a winning team."

The one advantage Lombardi had in Green Bay and that was, as Schaap put it, the smallness of the city. Lombardi had many social affairs for the players and their wives and he made darned sure there was a definite family atmosphere in Green Bay.

It is much easier to keep players "together" in a community like Green Bay than it is in cities like New York or Los Angeles. A former Packer who played in Los Angeles said "I lived 60 miles away from some of my teammates and I didn't see them until practice."

Schaap, who has combined with Kramer on a new Packer book called "Distant Replay," asked Herb Adderley, the Hall of Fame defensive back, what he thought of Lombardi.

Herbie put it this way: "Every day. And I love my father, who is also deceased, but I don't think about my father every day."

Bob Jeter, the Chicago defensive back who joined the Pack after a tour in Canada, said "these were the best years of my life. This was a team. We were like brothers — all of us, black and white. We were that close."

Running backs Donny Anderson and Jim Taylor rehash the 1960s.

Perhaps all this talk of love seems a little amazing now ... but it can continue — especially in Green Bay, which is still a small city.

Quick now, can you name the Packers of the first Super Bowl? Don't fret. Here's the game roster by position:

Quarterbacks — Bart Starr, Zeke Bratkowski.

Flankers — Carroll Dale, Bob Long, Red Mack.

Ends — Bill Anderson, Boyd Dowler, Marv Fleming, Max McGee.

Centers — Ken Bowman, Bill Curry.

Guards — Gale Gillingham, Jerry Kramer, Fred Thurston.

Tackles — Forrest Gregg, Bob Skoronski, Steve Wright.

Defensive Ends — Lionel Aldridge, Bob Brown, Willie Davis.

Defensive Tackles — Henry Jordan, Ron Kostelnik, Jim Weatherwax.

Linebackers — Lee Roy Caffey, Tommy Crutcher, Ray Nitschke, Dave Robinson.

Defensive Backs — Herb Adderley, Tom Brown, Doug Hart, Dave Hathcock, Bob Jeter, Willie Wood.

Kicker (Punter) — Don Chandler. ©

The Honor Roll

THE 66-YEAR LIST NOW HAS 909 NAMES

Give or take a straggler or two, the Honor Roll of Packer Players now contains 909 names.

This total of men who have worn the club's various shades of blue and green and gold covers the Packers' 66 years of operation and averages out to 13.7 players per season, the number of players added each season.

The first Packer Yearbook in 1960 published the list of Packer players and it had 519 names.

Thus, in the past 25 seasons, 390 new players were added for an average of slightly over 15 newcomers each year. Fewer players were added in the 1960s when the team was winning championships, but player traffic increased sharply during the more difficult seasons of the 1970s and early 1980s. In fact, in the 10 seasons from 1970 through 1979, a total of 221 players were added for an average of 22 newcomers per season.

The Yearbook last published the list in 1980, with 836 names, and the leaders of the Longevity Leaders has been threatened by only one player. Larry McCarren, the Packers' tireless center, finished his 12th season in 1984 and now ranks with Joe Laws, Max McGee and Willie Wood.

Five players are ahead of that group. Topping the list is Bart Starr, the daddy of all Packers with 16 years of player activity. Ray Nitschke is next with 15 years, followed by Forrest Gregg with 14. Two players played 13 seasons, Buckets Goldenberg and Dave Hanner.

Six of the nine players who played

12 years or longer performed chiefly through the salad days of the 1960s — Starr, Nitschke, Gregg, Hanner, McGee, and Wood. Two of the other three Joe Laws and Buckets Goldenberg, were the real toughies since they played on offense and defense during most of their careers. The ninth player is McCarren, who has had nine losing seasons in his 12 years.

Twelve players put in 11 years of service and the same number played 10 years. In fact, only 33 Packers played 10 years or longer. Eighteen of those were from the championship 1960s and only 11 were from the two-way period.

The 11-year men are Tony Canadeo, Larry Craig, Boyd Dowler, Jug Earp, Bill Forester, Arnie Herber, Don Hutson, Henry Jordan, Jerry Kramer, Baby Ray, Jim Ringo and Bob Skoronski.

The 10-year men are Ken Bowman, Fred Carr, Willie Davis, Milt Gantenbein, Gale Gillingham, Johnnie Gray, Hank Gremminger, Dick Himes, Clarke Hinkle, Curly Lambeau, Elijah Pitts, Dave Robinson.

Sixteen players had nine-year careers — Herb Adderley, Lionel Aldridge, Johnny Blood, Charley Brock, Hank Bruder, Jim Carter, Ted Fritsch, Paul Hornung, Gary Knafelc, Verne Lewellen, Rich McGeorge, Mike Michalske, Claude Perry, Jim Taylor, Fred Thurston, Whitey Woodin.

Here's the complete list of Packer players, who signed a contract and played at least one game:

Karl Swanke

ALONE ON

'The

Karl Swanke takes a breather while defense is on the field.

*By Bob McGinn,
Green Bay Press-Gazette*

We all know what a doctor does. But what would happen if, between every other appointment, he had to step outside and operate a jackhammer for a few minutes?

Consider the example of a construction worker. How would he perform if, after shoveling cement in the morning, he had to sit down to read X-rays and counsel patients that afternoon?

The results, to say the least, would be interesting. Variety applies to many occupations, but seldom does the job description require a person to mesh radically opposite mental and physical tasks with any regularity.

Meet Karl Swanke. He's been the starting left offensive tackle for the Green Bay Packers since the start of the 1982 season. If no man is an island, Swanke and the 27 others in the National Football League who have the same thankless job are the closest people to it on this planet.

If the Packers prepared a list of responsibilities for their left tackle, a position respectfully referred to as "The Island," it would read something like this:

"For 16 consecutive weeks, be prepared to wage grueling combat with some of the biggest, quickest and meanest athletes in captivity. You will be on the field for approximately 60 plays per game. On each play, you must make sure not to move until the ball is snapped. Then, on the 35 or so passing plays, you must make sure the right defensive end does not strike the quarterback. Our quarterback, Lynn Dickey, is righthanded. In effect, you are charged with protecting his blind side. On the 25 or so running plays, you must execute a series of blocks — some with brute force, some with intricate footwork — to keep defenders away from the ballcarrier. Mistakes are not tolerated. Excuses will not be accepted. Codes of conduct must be obeyed. Salary is negotiable, within our parameters. Should we judge your performance unacceptable, for any non-medical reason, we have the right to void your contract without explanation."

To say it is a difficult job would be an understatement. When you consider the Rogue's Gallery of right ends Swanke had to contend with in 1984, the task bordered on the Herculean.

Lyle Alzado, the nasty gentleman who plays right end for the Los Angeles Raiders, stomped around and over Swanke several times in the season's second week. Swanke asked himself what had gone wrong? The conclusion was he had allowed the swashbuckling Raider to break his concentration to the point at which maybe he had been intimidated.

Earlier in his career, Swanke might have withdrawn from the criticism, changed his way of doing business just for the sake of change, traded poise for panic. But in his development as a football player, Swanke had reached the level where that was not going to happen.

As things turned out, that lost afternoon in the Los Angeles memorial Coliseum was the only really poor performance Swanke had the entire season. He earned the respect of the new coaching staff and the respect of his teammates. It was the best season of his five in the NFL and stamped him as a solid pro tackle.

INSTEAD OF JUST A BEER, MAKE IT SOMETHING SPECIAL.

Special Export is a rare combination of the world's finest ingredients and an expensive, Old World way of brewing called Kraeusening.

The result is a distinctly different taste than that offered by most American beers today. It's full bodied, rich . . . a true European taste in the classic, Old World tradition.

Go ahead, sit back and enjoy something Special . . . Heileman's Special Export.

Heileman's Special Export. You can travel the world over and never find a better beer.

The high moment for Swanke came in February at the annual Packers Hall of Fame induction banquet, when it was announced that he ranked as the team's top percentage pass blocker for '84.

"He had a playoff percentage and that's what we're shooting for," offensive line coach Jerry Wampfler said. "I think he ranks up with the top 25 percent of the left tackles in the league on pass protection. I think he's a tackle that's growing."

"I'm kind of happy," said Swanke, a man not given to self-promotion. "I got better at both phases, but I still have a long way to go. I'm hoping to improve."

Swanke had to improve in order to survive against his opposition last season.

Of course, playing left tackle in the National Football Conference Central Division has meant two dates a year against right end Lee Roy Selmon of Tampa Bay. Selmon has been the epitome of a great defensive end since he entered the league in 1976: strong, quick, determined.

While Selmon's eight sacks in '84 didn't rank him among the league leaders, Swanke and others still consider him about the best in the business. That's why, no doubt, that Swanke felt his performance against the Buccaneers in Tampa last September was his top effort of the season. "All four quarters and the overtime... I played as hard as I could, as good as I could do," he said.

But for Swanke, last year brought a quality pass rusher virtually every week. He faced Jeff Bryant of Seattle, who had 14½ sacks for the year; Curtis Greer of St. Louis, 14; Jim Jeffcoat of Dallas, 11½; Rulon Jones of Denver, 11; William Gay of Detroit, 10; Reggie Doss of the Los Angeles Rams, 8½; Keith Ferguson of San Diego, 8, and Jim Wilks of New Orleans, 7½.

The only right ends who had more than one sack against the Packers were Jones, with two, and Alzado, with 1½. Left guard Tim Huffman was at fault on one of Jones' sacks. Conversely, Greer, Bryant, Wilks, Doss and both Selmon and Gay, in one game apiece, were shut out.

"Let's see," said Wampfler, recalling some of Swanke's performances. "He did a good job against Detroit. He did an excellent job against St. Louis. He did a very good job against Tampa Bay, and that's no small task, you know. I thought he played well against Rulon.

He didn't have any problems there against Bryant.

"I just felt that he climbed all year long, I really did," Wampfler concluded. "I felt that he was a much better football player at the end of the year and at mid-year than he was at the beginning of the year."

With the Packers, there may not be a more important position on offense, with the obvious exception of quarterback, than left tackle. And the reasons also are fairly obvious.

First, everyone knows the Packers are a downfield-throwing team. Their pass patterns require more time to develop than many teams, which puts pressure on Dickey's blockers.

Second, because of Dickey's lack of escape ability, the Packers are locked in as a strict dropback team. At times Dickey will set up a few yards from directly behind the center, but the Packers don't have the capability of being able to change up their protection schemes like Denver can with a John Elway or Seattle with a Dave Krieg.

Third, all pocket passers are most vulnerable on their blind side. Virtually all NFL quarterbacks are righthanded, so if the left tackle doesn't do his job the quarterback won't know what happened until he's obliterated by the right end. That stomach-wrenching scenario may be the single highest cause of debilitating quarterback injuries.

Fourth, the Packers do not use as many two tight end formations as many teams. Most of the time, Paul Coffman lines up next to the right tackle and Swanke is alone on the left flank. One of the best ways to control a pass-rushing right end is to line up a second tight end on the left side and keep him in on some passing downs.

The ability to pass protect on the left side is an art many tackles simply never master. If they are fortunate, there is an opening on the right side. If not, many cannot play in the NFL.

Ever since Swanke was a sixth-round draft choice of the Packers in 1980, he exhibited natural pass-protection ability. Though he stands 6-foot-6, Swanke possesses the grace and mobility of a man half a foot shorter. Scouts refer to it as "having good feet."

Moreover, Swanke has the long arms that are so necessary with today's pass-blocking rules, and he was blessed with unusual speed. When he reported to the Packers as a rookie from Boston College, he weighed 245 pounds and ran the 40-yard dash in 4.8 seconds.

Being able to hold out an onrushing end requires more than physical skills, however. It's as much a mental challenge as anything else, an area in which Swanke also is ahead of the game.

Perhaps you won't believe this, but it is true. In the era of the five-year college career and low graduation rates among NFL players, Swanke obtained a physics degree in the customary four-year under graduate timetable. If you think many football players can do that, think again.

Swanke's father, Roy, grew up in Tigerton, Wis., played a year of football in the mid-1940s at St. Norbert College and went on to obtain an engineering degree from Purdue University. Mr. Swanke became president of a large and successful manufacturing company in the East. He died when Karl was 14, but his son acquired many of the same talents. "My dad was vice president of the corporation when he was only 40," Swanke said. "I think he was closing in on genius."

Swanke is an extremely cerebral sort. In college, he remembers being considered a "square." He has loosened up in recent years and likes to mix with his good friends on the offensive line. Still, there are times during the season when Swanke will sit in his locker room cubicle and read books oblivious to the commotion all around him.

To become a percentage pass blocker, one thing a player must have is keen powers of concentration. Let up one second and — Pow! — that end will be around your outside shoulder en route to the quarterback.

Book learning doesn't mean much on a football field, but learning habits do. Besides having conquered physics, Swanke likes to relax at home putting together 2,000-word puzzles.

"Karl uses his intelligence on his pass protection," said Wampfler. "He has excellent concentration and boy, that is important. There are guys who can pass protect but they can't hold their concentration throughout a game."

As with most professional linemen, injuries and weight training have brought major changes from the way Swanke looked the day he arrived from Boston College.

For Swanke, it's been four operations on his left knee — two major surgeries, one for a torn cruciate ligament, the other for torn cartilage, and two arthroscopic surgeries. They caused him to miss 12 games of the 1981 season, and the final game and playoffs during strike-shortened 1982. "It took me almost two years to heal," Swanke said.

Swanke was too light his first few years in the league, playing anywhere from 250 to 262 pounds. When Forrest Gregg replaced Bart Starr as coach following the 1983 season, Swanke was told in so many words to bulk up and get stronger. He played at 270 pounds most of 1984 and plans to be nearly 280 this season.

Marriage, in June 1983, may have had a lot to do with his weight gain. "My wife, Maggie, is a really good cook," Swanke said. "When you're single, it's hard to come back after working out and try to put together a meal that was sustaining. It was either McDonald's or Hardee's and that's not going to get you anywhere. Plus, I think I was just naturally maturing."

The Packers, and Swanke, are hoping that the additional weight and his veteran status will help him become more of an effective run blocker. He knows he must improve, which may be to his advantage. "I didn't just let it go as something I couldn't do," he said. "I tried a lot harder on it and I think it came around a lot better after the midpoint of the season."

There is one major difference between blocking for the pass and the run: on the pass, the blocker gives ground; on the run, the blocker tries to take ground. And that's why having a job like Swanke's forces him to mix two opposite temperaments. He must be conservative and passive in pass protection, explosive and aggressive on run blocking.

Swanke's personality is more placid than fiery, and Wampfler understands that. If Wampfler had his way, Swanke would explode more on his drive blocks. But if that doesn't occur, Wampfler still believes Swanke could become better on the run by throwing his weight around with more abandon.

"He plays it safe too much and he's too careful," Wampfler explained. "He's afraid he'll slip off and miss or the guy is going to angle or something and he'll miss. He's more of a push-type blocker. In doing so, he doesn't really let himself go all the time, but he has the athletic ability to do that.

"If he's not going to be explosive, then he's got to be strong enough to sustain on people and muscle them a little bit. You've got to have one or the other. I think that his run blocking will pick up as he gains more strength and confidence."

Over the years, it's been hinted that Swanke may not be a tough enough person. Swanke thought about that, then said this: "What is tough? Is it tough to be able to block some guy and stop him from getting to the quarterback? I mean there's a lot of guys who can knock somebody over on their can but can't stop anybody from getting to the quarterback. What's more important? I'm just doing the best I can."

Dickey appreciates what Swanke has meant to him. "I'd pick him over a ton of guys in this league," Dickey said. "He played real well last year."

Each year, it seems, Swanke comes to training camp with something to prove. One year the Packers traded a third-round draft choice to Houston for tackle Angelo Fields. The next year they tried to make No. 1 pick Ron Hallstrom into a left tackle. Swanke warded them off, only to find new challenges.

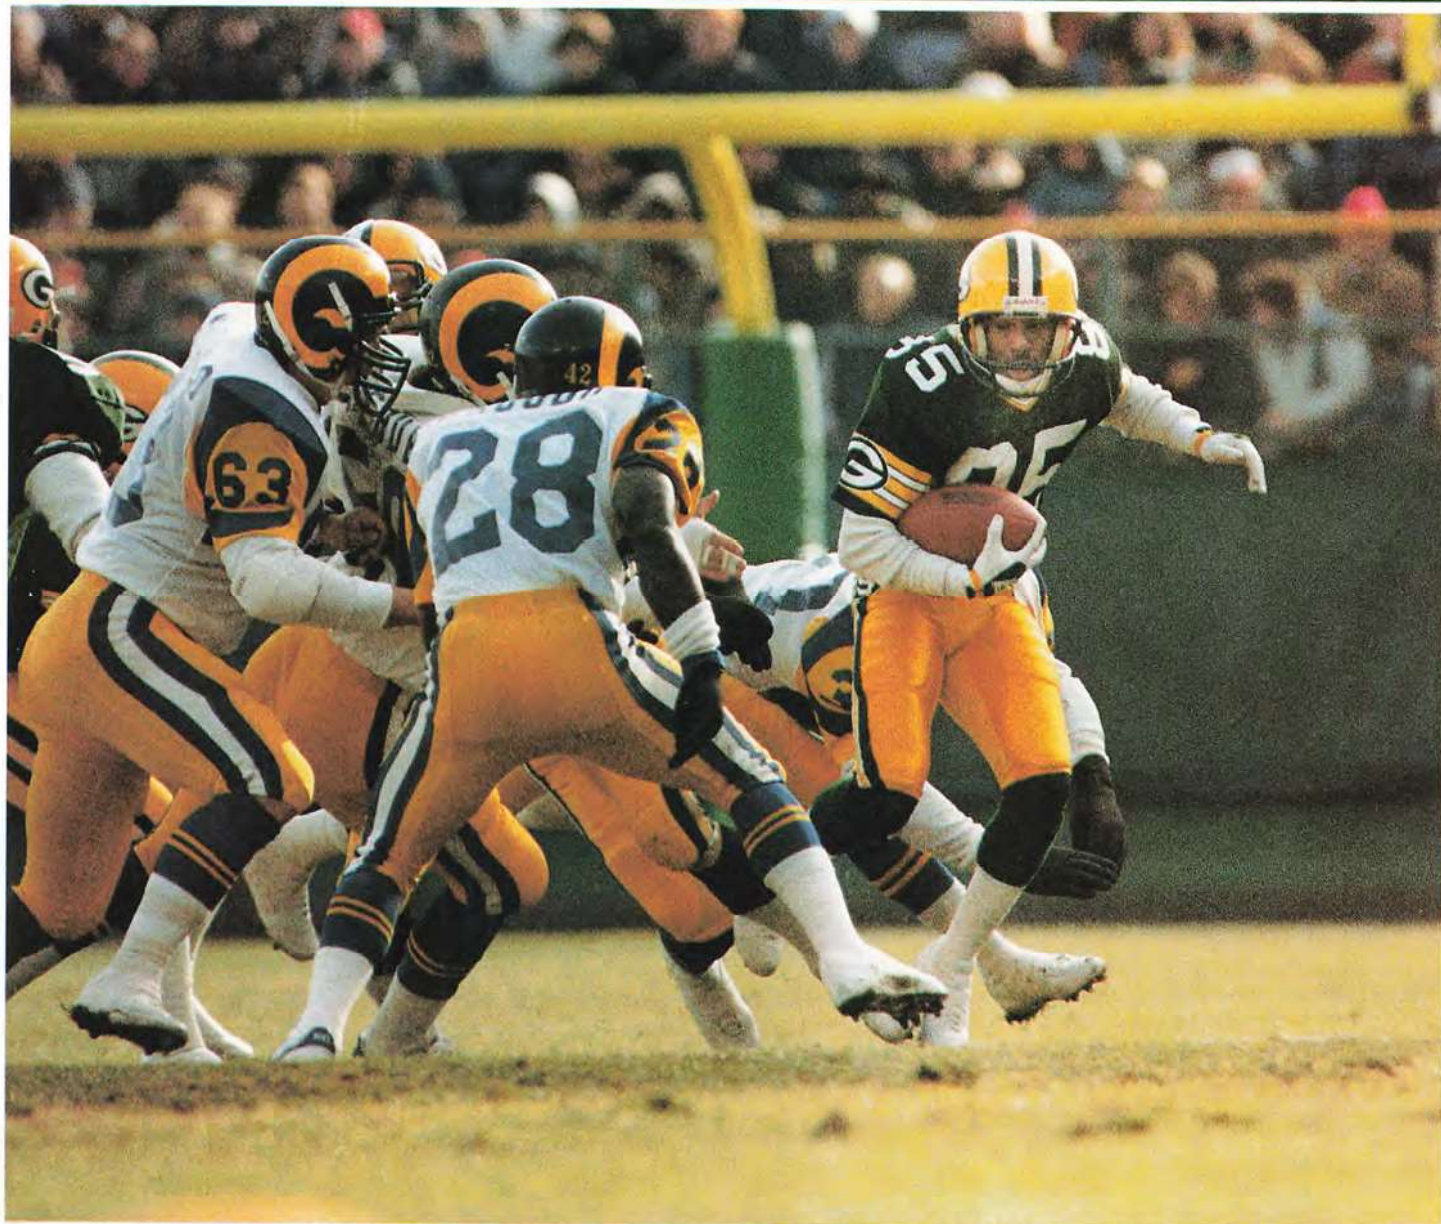

This year it will come from Ken Ruetgers, the tackle from Southern Cal the Packers traded up to select with the seventh pick of the draft last April. When the announcement was made, Swanke admitted he was somewhat shaken. Later, he said, "Whatever happens, happens. They were satisfied with my improvement. I just have to keep on improving." ©

Phillip Epps evades four Los Angeles Rams after catching pass.

PHILLIP EPPS - Just a Blur

*By Gary Van Sickle
The Milwaukee Journal*

The perfect photograph of Phillip Epps probably would wind up in the waste basket. It would show him at his best, in full stride at top speed, as he really is, as we see him.

He would be a blur.

Ah, such are the wonders of modern photography. Not even Epps, the speedy wide receiver of the Green Bay Packers, can outrun a camera. There are a few other things that Epps can't outrun, but they're hardly worth mentioning.

It's just as well that Epps isn't too quick for a fast shutter. It means he can be captured on film, in crystal clarity, whether he's racing 90 yards with a punt return like he did in 1983 or running the 40-yard dash in training camp in 4.3 seconds or running the 200 in 20.0, the world's second fastest time in 1982 or just plain racing past a cornerback on a deep pass pattern.

"I've always been the fastest," Epps said. "I never felt there was anybody I couldn't beat. There are probably some players who are faster, but I feel my chance is as good as anybody."

Before Epps brought his speed to the Packer receiving corps in 1982, he was a world-class sprinter for Texas Christian University, which isn't far from his hometown of Atlanta, Texas. Among his track accomplishments were a 6.07-second timing in the 60 at a meet in 1982, then the fifth fastest time ever; a 10.1 time in the 100, and a second-place finish in the NCAA 1982 outdoor meet's 200-meter event in 20.1 seconds.

He could have pursued a career in track and field, but he chose football instead, another sport he excelled in at TCU. It was an easy choice, he said.

"It wasn't a big decision," Epps said. "In 1982, guys (amateur athletes) weren't making near as much money as now, like Carl Lewis. I wanted to run, but it would have been a little difficult. I liked the competition, and looking forward to running against other guys. But I knew what I wanted to do."

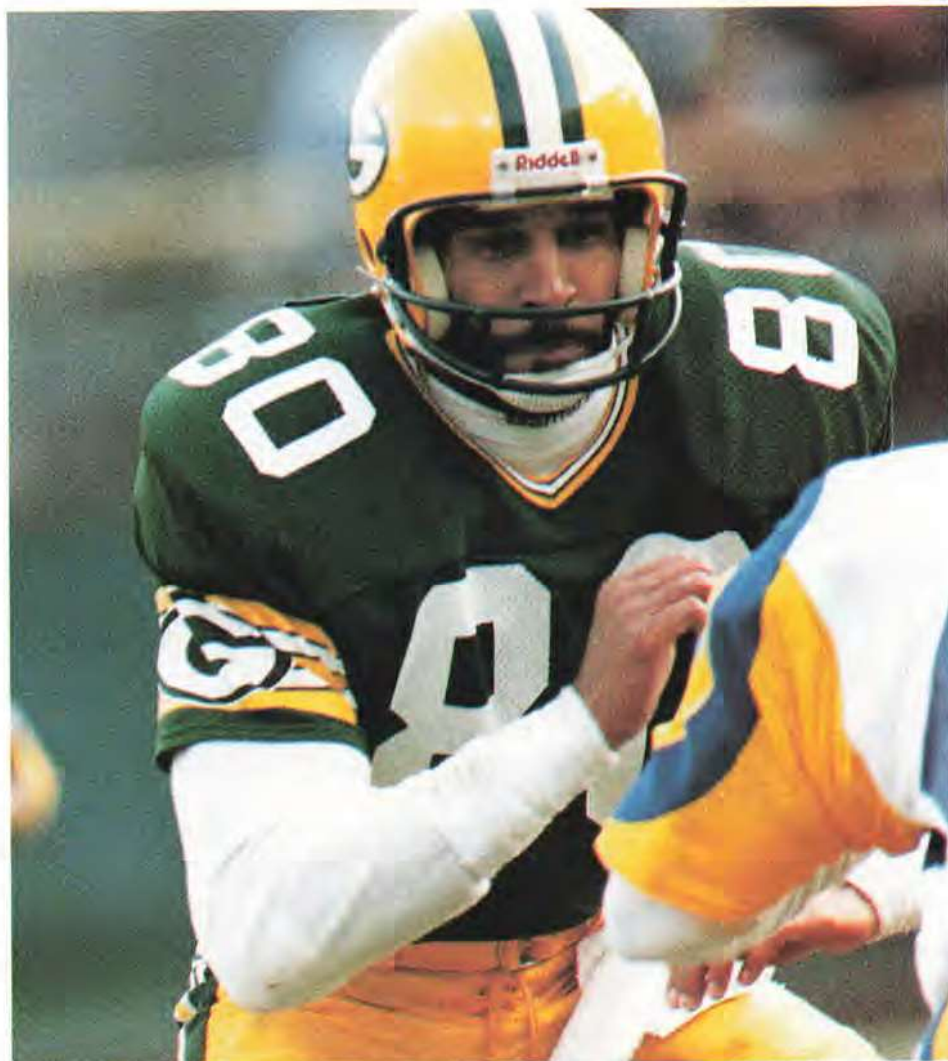

What he wanted to do was play football. That was something less than earthshaking news to the National Football League, where coaches go in search of swift giants, not for 5-foot 9-1/2 - inch track stars who also play football. That's why 320 players were chosen before the Packers drafted Epps in the 12th round of the 1982 draft. The word was, he was too small and surely wouldn't be able to survive the kind of punishment receivers have to take in the NFL, especially in that combat zone known as the middle.

They were wrong, of course. Epps has proven that in three seasons with the Packers. He averaged 22.6 yards a catch on 10 receptions and was the Packers' rookie of the year in '82; he caught 18 passes for 313 yards in '83, and scored a touchdown with a 90-yard punt return against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers; and caught 26 passes for 435 yards and three touchdowns last season. He finished the year as the starter after John Jefferson was sidelined by a rib injury.

Epps was one of six draftees who made the Packers in the shortened strike year of 1982, when the schedule was cut from 16 to 9 games. Four of those picks are still competing — Epps, Ron Hallstrom, Del Rodgers and Robert Brown.

Epps opened a lot of eyes against the Jets in New York in 1982 when he caught two touchdown passes from Lynn Dickey — a 24 yarder in the first quarter that put the Pack ahead 6-0 and a 23-yard job in the second period for a 13-6 edge.

Epps finished 1982 with only 10 catches but averaged 22.6 per — a tribute to his great speed. Behind Jefferson, who caught 57 passes in 1983, Epps still managed 18 receptions for an average of 17.4. He snagged 26 in 1984 in sharing the spot with Jefferson, who also grabbed 26.

James Lofton, blocking a Los Angeles Ram, has a new bookend in Phillip Epps.

For his career, Epps caught 54 passes for an average of 18.0.

"I never had any doubts," Epps said of his football ability. "I've been playing football a long time. It's nothing new for me to be going across the middle. I feel comfortable."

He felt very comfortable, indeed, as a starter at the end of the '84 season.

"That was a highlight," he said with a smile. "Getting an opportunity and having someone have the confidence to put me out there."

"Starting really isn't any different. You run the same routes as you run in practice. It's just that you run them with the first team. It's a lot more satisfying to be in the game every play."

Packers Coach Forrest Gregg has no doubts about Epps' ability, either.

"What I saw of him last year, there's no question he can be a starting wide receiver," Gregg said. "He's got everything you want. He doesn't have the great size that many people look for, but he makes up for it with quickness."

And he makes a nice, though hardly symmetrical, bookend for the Packers' other wide receiver, James Lofton, who is 6-3.

"With Epps, we have the added attraction of deep speed on both sides," Gregg said. "With all our weapons, people can't really double-team anybody."

Phillip made quite a splash as a rookie and after the season his position coach, Lew Carpenter, called him "the best 'third receiver' on any team in the NFL." He backed up both Jefferson and Lofton and in some formations was a third receiver on the field.

When Jefferson was out and Epps played last season, there was no drop-off in effectiveness of the Packer passing attack. It all goes back to that speed. While he didn't have the experience and perhaps some of the precision-like moves that Jefferson, still his close friend, had, Epps had his speed. He also has a pretty good pair of hands.

"He doesn't have the experience that JJ had, but he's played bits and pieces of several seasons, so he's got some experience," said backup quarterback Randy Wright, a second-year player from the University of Wisconsin. "Maybe JJ would make a great, outstanding over-the-shoulder, one-handed catch, but JJ wouldn't get as open as Phil does. And I've seen Phil make some great catches, too.

"He gets himself wide open because of his speed. Nobody sits on his breaking points. He'll be more wide open than a bigger guy because they know he can go deep.

"He has talent. That's why he played at the end of last season."

Epps made a memorable play in a memorable 20-14 victory over the Chicago Bears in the next-to-last game of 1984. It was a strange game that saw Bears' running back Walter Payton play a series at quarterback and the Packers go to their third-string quarterback, Rich Campbell, after Wright suffered a season-ending knee injury.

The Packers had the ball in the final minute as things looked bleak. Epps got open on a deep pattern and Campbell saw him. Under a heavy rush, Campbell let go a long pass that was underthrown. Epps came back, caught it in front of a startled defender, darted between two Bear players and into the end zone for the winning touchdown.

While Epps' speed created that opportunity, it was his receiving savvy that made the play.

Yes, he made the right choice when he chose football over track. Oh, he still keeps his hand — or maybe that should be feet — in track. In February, he won an elimination 60-yard race against pro football speedsters in Dallas, then beat Mitchell Brookins of Buffalo and Bruce Davis of Cleveland in the final race.

He won $12,000 for his efforts.

"That's not bad for off-season work," he said, chuckling.

Epps also works often with the TCU track team in the off-season, since, as he noted, "There aren't many track meets I can run in anymore."

He enjoys the workouts, helps out with the team some, and stays in condition.

Even though he is now a football player, first and foremost, you need only see him run to recognize him as an ex-track man. His gait is fluid, effortless, flawless.

"I run with speed," he said, asked to describe his running style. "It just came natural for me. If you've got natural speed, the mechanics are easy."

After that, it's all just a blur. ©

IT'S GREAT TO BE ASSOCIATED

A special thank you to all the area businesses we are proud to serve.

And we'd like to be associated with your business, too, no matter what its size.

It's true we're the largest commercial bank north of Milwaukee, with a corporate lending limit of up to ten million dollars and many of the area's largest companies as clients. But we've also helped many small and medium size businesses get started and expand.

We like working with these smaller businesses. Years of experience have taught us how important they are to the economic health of the community. When they grow and prosper, we all do.

Our Business Banking Department has over 80 years of commercial lending experience waiting to serve you. We can cut through the usual red tape and get the answers you need in a hurry. We'll give you the creative input and personal interest that are hard to find in today's computerized world.

You'll also receive fast turnaround on your loans and a full line of innovative cash management programs that can anticipate your needs and productively utilize your cash flow.

If you have a small or medium size business, we'd like to be associated with you. Just call me, Randy Peterson, Senior Vice President of Business Banking, at 433-3006.

Tim Lewis relaxes on sidelines after his 99 yard run with interception against Los Angeles Rams. Right, Lewis takes off on record gallop behind Mike McLeod.

— 99 YARDS —

Tim Lewis' Run Breaks 1950 Record

The powerhouse Chicago Bears were leading the Packers 7 to 3 early in the third quarter of a game in Green Bay on a sunny Sunday, Oct. 1, 1950.

Old wooden City Stadium was packed with 24,893 screamers looking for an upset. The Bears were 9-3 in 1949 and the Packers were 2-10. It was Gene Ronzani's first year as Packer head coach and he was 1-1 going into the Bear game. The Bears were unbeaten.

Earlier, Ab Wimberly had intercepted a Johnny Lujack pass to kill a Bear threat on the Packer eight-yard line and the game had all the earmarks of a dog-fight, like most Packer-Bear games.

Good work on the opening kickoff of the second quarter, plus a roughing penalty, backed the Bears up to the Packer 19-yard line. On second down, Lujack aimed a pass toward Jim Keane and Wally Dryer, a former Bear, intercepted and returned 29 yards for a TD and a 10-7 Packer lead.

After an exchange of punts, the Bears launched a drive and with the aid of a Packer clipping penalty reached the Packer 21-yard line. Again Lujack fired a pass toward Keane out to his left and Rebel Roy Steiner, a rookie defensive back, grabbed it and raced 94 yards down the sideline to a TD, with Joe Spencer getting a key block.

Steiner's run put the Packers ahead 17-7 and led to a 31-21 upset victory. In addition, Steiner's scamper set a new Packer record for longest run with an interception, breaking the mark of 71 set by Hal Van Every against Pittsburgh in 1941.

Now, shift the scene to Nov. 19, 1984 in Milwaukee County Stadium — 34 years later. The Packers, on their way to a fourth straight win after a seven-game losing skein, are ahead of the Los Angeles Rams 24-6 midway in the fourth period, with the ball on the Packer 16.

Timothy Jay Lewis, playing the same position as Steiner, drifted back as Jack Kemp prepared to throw for a touchdown to cut Green Bay's lead.

Kemp's throw was aimed toward the left corner of the end zone but Lewis intercepted just back of the one-yard line and sailed 99 yards down the sidelines to a touchdown with a half dozen Rams in pursuit. The TD set the final score at 31-7.

Thus, Lewis had broken Steiner's record expectedly and without fanfare.

There was a similarity in the deeds of the two defensive backs. Each finished the season with seven interceptions. Steiner ran his back 190 yards, an average of 27.1. Lewis moved his 151 yards, average 21.6. Steiner played only two seasons. Lewis will play his third this year.

Lewis' record was one of only two individual records set by the Packers last year.

James Lofton fractured the other mark, breaking his own record of 1,300 yards per season catching passes in 1983 with 1,361 yards in 1984.

Lofton has a chance to knock off one of Don Hutson's tough-to-break marks this season. He needs only 348 yards to crack Hutson's 11-year career total of 8,010 yards. Lofton now has 7,663 yards in seven seasons.

The following records are presented with apologies to all the Packer stars who played before records were kept:

SCOTT BRUNNER

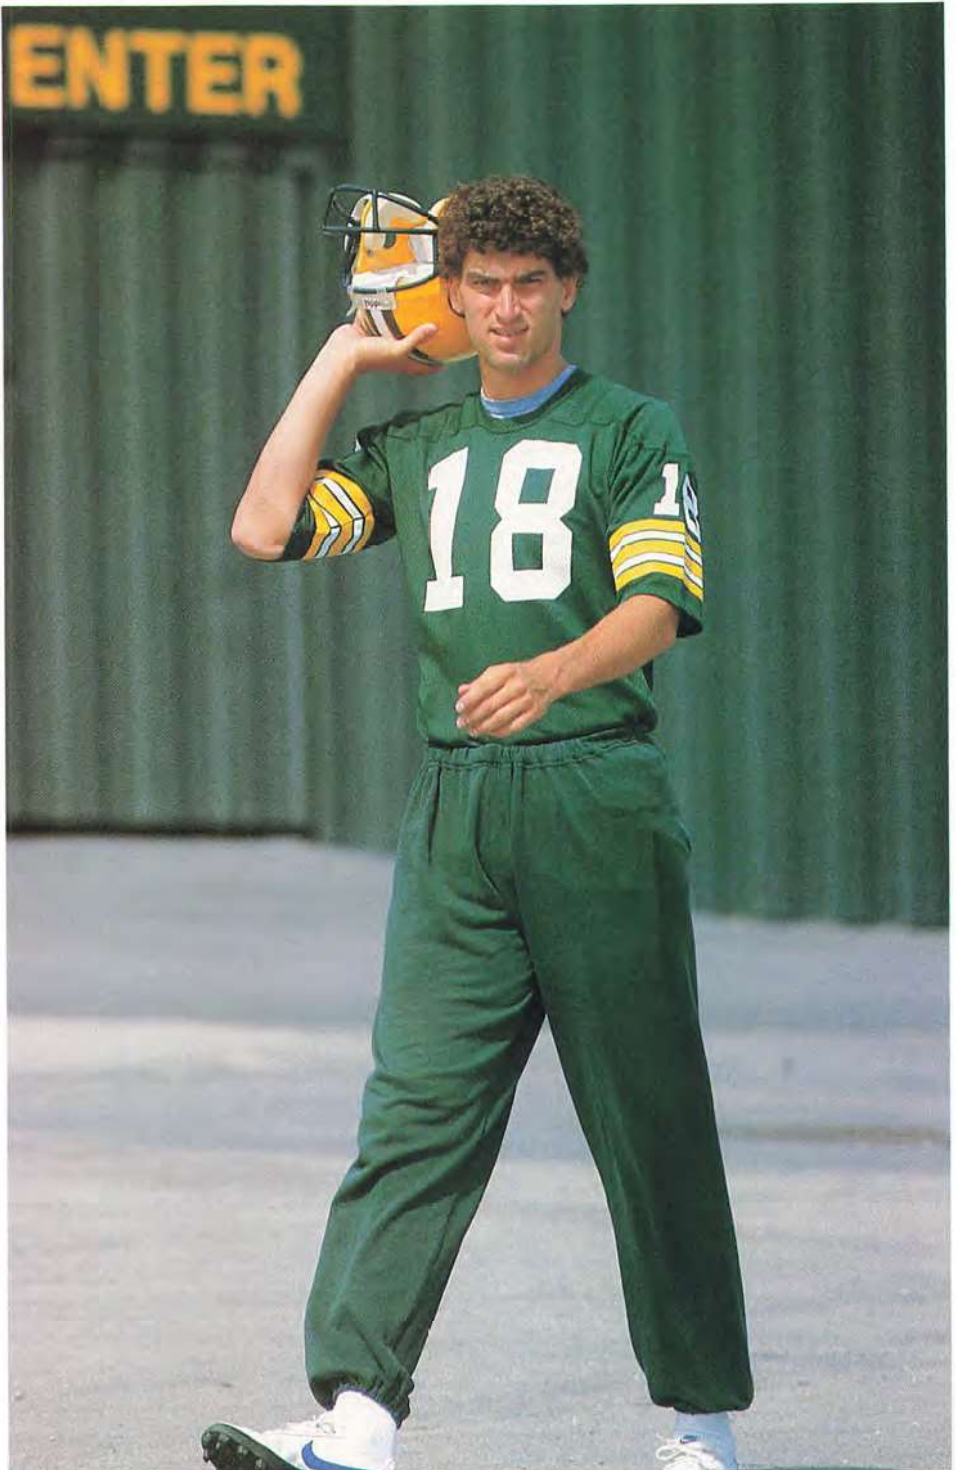

The Right Place at the Right Time

*By Tom Woodrow
The Oshkosh Northwestern*

A long and thorough search for a competent, established NFL quarterback, a signal caller with just the right tools to complement veteran Lynn Dickey and an explosive Packer offense, came to an end on April 26 of this year when the Packers announced the acquisition of five-year veteran Scott Lee Brunner from the Denver Broncos.

A 28-year-old native of Pennsylvania and a graduate of Delaware, Brunner spent the first four years of his career with the New York Giants, and was then traded to Denver for the Broncos' fourth round draft choice in 1984. He spent the 1984 campaign on the Denver bench (injured reserve), the Broncos having decided to sink or swim with their highly-rated and highly-paid sophomore, John Elway.

Packer head coach Forrest Gregg announced that Green Bay was trading an undisclosed, conditional, future draft choice to Denver, and that he was very pleased to have acquired a quarterback with established leadership qualities. It was a trade that worked out to the satisfaction of all parties involved, including Brunner, who since joining the Packers has made no secret of the fact that he is pleased to be in Green Bay.

"Two years ago," says Brunner, "when the Giants informed me that they were considering trading me, they asked me for a list of places that I'd like to go. Green Bay was right up there on my list. The Packers have always been a team I thought I'd like to play for.

Green Bay has one of the top offenses in the NFL, an explosive passing attack with probably the best corps of pass catchers in the league. What more could any quarterback possibly want? I knew Green Bay was looking for an experienced quarterback to back up Lynn Dickey, and I was following the situation as closely as I could in the newspapers. I have to admit that I was kind of hoping the Packers were interested in me, and when I heard that they had made the trade for me, I was genuinely pleased."

In addition to joining a team with an offense that is well-suited to his style of play, Brunner is apparently going to have another of his career ambitions fulfilled in Green Bay.

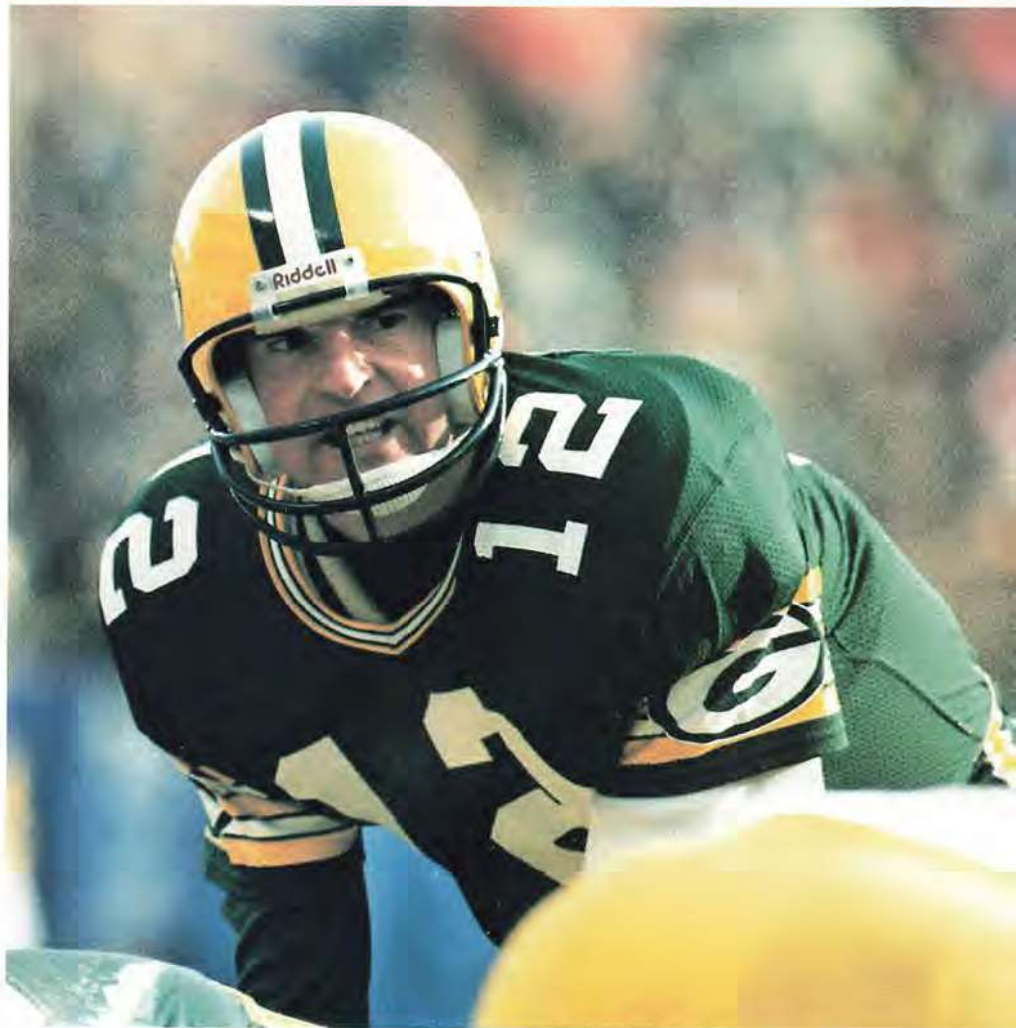

"With the Giants, and again with Denver, I had never had the opportunity to play with and learn from an experienced veteran quarterback," explains Brunner. "In New York, Phil Simms and I came along at about the same time so I was thrust into action without having been able to learn some of the finer points of the game from a top notch veteran. In Denver last year, I was the veteran with just four years in the league. Now, I will have that opportunity to learn from one of the best in the game."

"I have always been a fan of Lynn Dickey. I have always admired and respected him not only for his talent, but for his character, stamina and determination as well. I think working with Lynn will give me the chance to learn, to really mature as a quarterback. It's definitely an opportunity that has been missing from my career until now. Lynn is a master at reading defenses, which is one of the most important things a quarterback can learn to do. I am really looking forward to working with Lynn."

Another reason Brunner is pleased to be with the Packers is that Green Bay's offense is suited to his strong points as a quarterback.

"That's probably the reason the Packers acquired me instead of some of the other quarterbacks they might have been able to get," says Brunner. "Like Lynn, I'm pretty much a drop back type of quarterback. I'm not the most mobile quarterback in the league, but I can move around if I have to. Given my choice, I'd rather sit in the pocket, and I think that's what they are looking for here in Green Bay. I have good height (6-5) and stability in my play, and over the first five years of my career I think I have been labeled as cool and calm in pressure situations. I don't run out of the pocket prematurely, and from what I've been able to tell so far, that's about what the Packers want in a quarterback."

"If you look at the Packers' draft in the last couple of years, you see a commitment to protecting the quarterback. That would be nice for a change. The Packer offensive system here is a lot like New York's and Denver's in many respects, which should make it a little easier to pick up, but the one real difference is the determination to protect the passer. I was never what you could call well-protected, consistently, so as a passer I like what I see along these lines in Green Bay."

Brunner is by no means penciling himself in as the heir-apparent to Dickey. He knows he faces a competitive situation and must earn a spot on the Packer roster.

"Certainly, I envision myself as a starting quarterback," says the resident of New Jersey. "The day you stop trying to be a number one quarterback is the day you should hang it up. I don't know how much longer Lynn plans on playing, and right now I'm not worrying about what happens down the line. I see myself in a competitive position with at least three other quarterbacks, and right now my goals are to make this team and make a contribution to this team. Randy Wright has a lot of assets, and as long as Rich Campbell or anyone else is around, they are competing with me.

"I just want to learn this system quickly and be prepared to perform at my optimum level. I know Green Bay looked at a lot of quarterbacks and I'm thankful they chose me. I believe in myself, I believe I have a strong arm and can get the ball downfield, which I think is important to this offense. If it works out that I get a chance to run the team somewhere down the line, then that's fine with me, but this year, I have a lot of work to do to justify the trade the Packers made for me."

Brunner will have a lot of folks cheering for his emergence as the quarterback the Packers need to insure themselves of depth and stability at the position. Among them is Lynn Dickey himself.

"Obviously, it's very important to have experience and depth at quarterback," says Dickey on the subject of Brunner.

"The big advantage of our obtaining Scott is that he has led a team to a playoff berth (Giants, 1981) and he has been in pressure situations. You can't teach that kind of experience. You also have to figure that over a long, 16-game season, talent and experience in more than one of your quarterbacks is going to pay off. Injuries are likely to some degree, and if you want your team to be competitive through an injury situation, you have to have talent and experienced depth at quarterback.

"I always thought Scott played well against us, and on those few occasions when I had a chance to talk to him, I thought he was a pleasant guy to be around, a guy with character. Personally, I'm glad to have a quarterback of his calibre in Green Bay. It could mean a great deal to this team, and I'm sure that's why we went out and got him."

Brunner is not the first member of his family to don the Green and Gold. His father, John Brunner, was the Pack's offensive backfield coach in 1983. Scott's interest in one day playing in Green Bay probably dates back to that year.

"I was playing for the Giants that year, but I stayed in touch with my dad like always, and he frequently mentioned that I'd like Green Bay," explains Scott. "He told me about the tradition here, the unique nature of the franchise, how great and knowledgeable the fans were, and how the facilities were second to none in the league. Now that I've begun to see it all for myself, I can begin to appreciate what he was talking about. I'd like to be here a long time."

It would be natural enough to assume that since Brunner's father was a football coach (college and pro) by profession, Scott would have had little choice but to become a football player. That is not, however, how it worked in the Brunner household.

"I suppose a doctor's son knows more about medicine than most people, but that doesn't mean that he's going to become a doctor," says Brunner. "It's possible that my father's being a coach had something to do with my getting into football, but as a kid I actually liked baseball and basketball more. Dad never pushed me into football at all. What he wanted more than anything was for me to be a good athlete, to experience the benefits of athletic competition, and to enjoy myself in sports. As a coach, he has stayed out of my football career, because he more than most people realizes that without knowing the specifics about whatever team I was playing for, he might only be interfering.

"All he has ever said about Green Bay is that I would like it here. He likened Green Bay to a college football town where the fans are such a big part of the game. I think I chose football on my own. I guess pro football is more of business than it is a game, but I really enjoy playing and the thrill of being in front of the huge crowd."

At the University of Delaware, an NCAA Division II school, Brunner earned three football letters but really didn't play much until his senior year. As a senior, he led the Delaware Blue Hens to a 13-1 record while completing 134 of 268 (50 per cent) of his passes for 2,401 yards and 24 touchdowns. The 24 touchdowns set an all-time Delaware single season record, as did his five touchdown passes in a single game. His senior season was capped by being named Kodak All-America in Division II.

Brunner's best year as a pro was his last year with the Giants, when he completed 190 passes in 386 attempts for 2,516 yards and nine touchdowns, with 22 interceptions in 12 games. He had two 300-yard passing days that season, 395 yards against San Diego and 346 yards against the Los Angeles Raiders. He was the Giants' starting quarterback for the entire (9-game, strike-shortened) 1982 season. Brunner spent most of the 1984 season on Denver's injured reserve list with a knee infection. Other than the knee infection, he has never suffered what might be termed a serious football injury. "Just a lot of the normal bumps and bruises that accompany inconsistent pass protection," jokes Brunner.

Scott and his wife, Dale, have one daughter, Ashley, who turned one year old in April. The Brunner family will reside in Green Bay during the season, but also plan to maintain a residence in New Jersey.

"We are not going to move to Green Bay full-time right away," says Brunner, who holds a degree in accounting from Delaware. "I have some business ventures going in New Jersey, in the safety products industry, and I dabble in real estate, oil and gas, all of which requires that I spend my off-seasons in New Jersey, for the time being. But it looks like Green Bay has some very nice golf courses, and to me that's pretty attractive. We'll see how it all works out."

Ideally, being acquired by the Packers could work out very well for Brunner. He feels that the timing might be just right.

"Everyone says that it takes about six years to come into your own as an NFL quarterback," notes the Pack's newest signal caller. "Green Bay could be the right place at the right time for me. This will be my sixth year, and there's no question that I have an opportunity here like I've had nowhere else. Maybe my career will really take off here in Green Bay. I'd really like that."

So would the Packers and their fans. ☺

These are some of the 72 private boxes constructed on the east and west sides of Lambeau Field in Green Bay.

Lambeau Field has a New Look

Lambeau Field, built with a seating capacity of slightly over 32,000 in 1957, has taken on a new look.

Seventy-two private luxury boxes have been built — with 44 on the East rim of the stadium and 28 flanking both sides of the pressbox on the West side.

Green Bay thus joins 24 other clubs in the league that have private boxes in their stadiums. Only the Miami Dolphins, Los Angeles Raiders and Washington Redskins do not have boxes, although the Raiders and Dolphins have plans for boxes in the near future.

Lambeau Field's new boxes have many of the comforts of home—air conditioning, heating, carpeting, theater-type chairs, refrigerator, wet bar, color TV set, couch, table. A telephone is optional and restrooms are located in the hallways of both decks.

Each box seats 12 persons, thus boosting the capacity of the stadium to 56,926.

The 12 east-side boxes between the 35-yard lines are leased for $15,000 a year. All boxes on the west side and the remaining 32 on the east side cost $10,000 annually.

Actually, 68 of the boxes are being leased. Of the remaining four, two are being used by the Packer executive committee and other Packer officials, one will be used for the visiting club's owners and officials and one has been assigned to Coach Forrest Gregg.

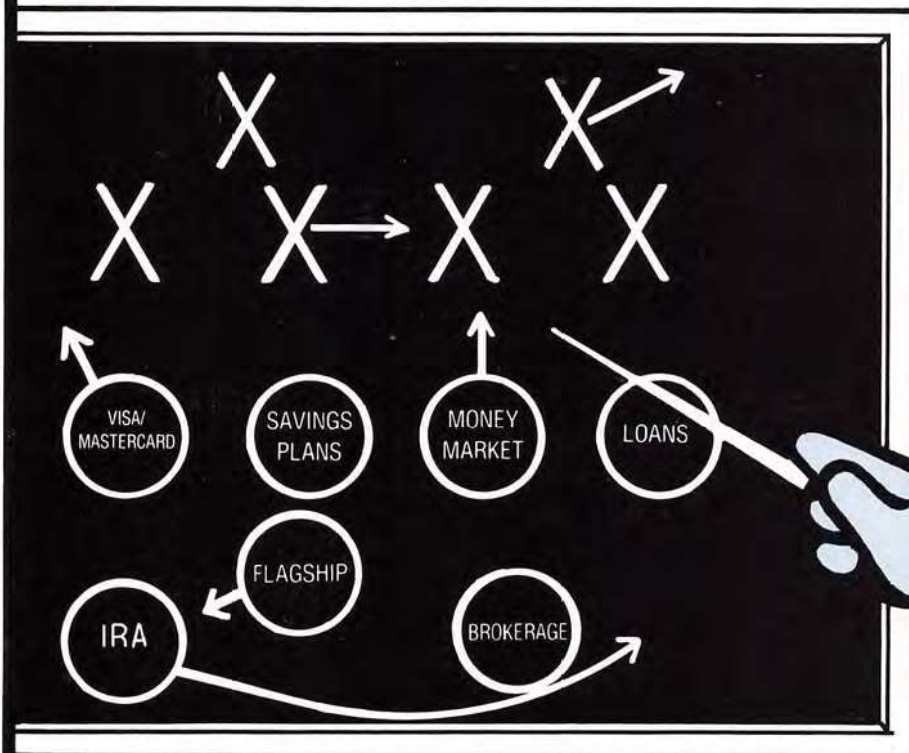

Tickets to the game and food and drinks are an extra expense, said Bob Harlan, who is in charge of the operation of the boxes. The Packers will give two guest passes and two parking passes per box lease. The food menu, including everything from shrimp salad trays to dinners, will be sent out to boxholders Monday before a Sunday game so that everything will be ready.

Harlan, assistant to President Robert J. Parins, said that the boxes were purchased by corporations from the Upper Peninsula to the Fox River Valley, chiefly Green Bay, and down to northern Illinois.

The entire project will cost the Packers close to $5 million to build and the two decks are designed so that a third can be constructed in the future. The Packers will realize a profit of $750,000 from the first-year rent — plus revenue from more than 800 additional ticketholders. ©

THE DRAFT

Offensive Line Bolstered With First Two Picks

Ken Ruettgens gets first test in mini-camp.

Coach Forrest Gregg batted 90 per cent in his first whirl at a Packer draft in 1984.

Nine of the 10 players chosen made the roster and three of those were starters — Alphonso Carreker, Donnie Humphrey and Tom Flynn. In fact, Flynn turned out to be the NFL's rookie of the year.

Now . . . what can Gregg and his personnel people, headed by Dick Corrick, possibly do for an encore in 1985?

The answer comes when the final roster is put together about Sept. 3 — some five days before the league opener in New England. However, matching the numbers of a year ago would seem impossible. All Gregg wants to do is up-grade his football team.

There was just one similarity in the two drafts — no second choices. The No. 2 choice in 1984 went to San Diego as final payment for John Jefferson and the No. 2 choice this year went to Buffalo to permit Green Bay to move up from the 14th spot to the Bills' seventh in the first round.

This enabled the Packers to select Ken Ruettgens, a 6-5, 274-pound offensive tackle from Southern California. "We have a football player that we have coveted for a long time. We think he is outstanding," Gregg said after the draft.

The Packers were fearful that Ruettgens would be well gone by the time the 14th pick arrived. Thus, they made the trade. The Packers also could have taken Al Toon, Wisconsin's fine pass catcher. However, they opted for Ruet-tgers and Corrick explained the reason for the move:

"A feeling that offensive linemen are hard to come by. We probably can't get as great a wide receiver as Al Toon but we can get somebody who can improve our team at wide receiver by the middle rounds. Taking an offensive lineman down there (middle rounds) would have taken some kind of miracle."

As it turned out, the Packers' third choice (in the fourth round) was a wide receiver—unknown and unheralded Walter Stanley, a lightning of a pass receiver and kick returner at 5-9, 184 out of Mesa College. He really stood out in the first mini-camp and Gregg was highly pleased with the surprise selection.

The third round (second player chosen) pick was Rich Moran, a 274-pound guard and center from San Diego State. Moran, who would have been the Pack's second choice if they had not traded with Buffalo, was rated as possibly the Pack's center of the future.

Ruettggers and Moran are similar in that they both have a mean-streak temperament and are both extremely aggressive. Moran's father, Jim, played for the New York Giants five years starting in 1964.

Incidentally, Ruettggers asked for and received permission to wear No. 75, the number that Gregg wore during his Hall of Fame career with the Packers. Ruettggers wore No. 77 at Southern Cal. Only three Packers wore 75 since Gregg ended his Green Bay career in 1970 — Dave Pureifory, Carl Barzilauskas and Rich Turner.

Unlike a year ago when the Pack picked five defensive players in the first six rounds, they only selected four defensive players in the entire draft this year. Two linebackers were picked — Brian Noble of Arizona State and Eric Wilson of Maryland. They are ticketed to give the Pack some bulk at inside linebacker.

The other two defenders were cornerbacks Ken Stills of Wisconsin and Ronnie Burgess of Wake Forest.

The remaining five players included a good-hands tight end, Mark Lewis of Texas A&M; a halfback or fullback-type in Gary Ellerson of Wisconsin; a 317-pound guard by the name of Morris Johnson of Alabama A&M; quarterback Joe Shield, who had a habit of getting things done at Trinity College; and punter Jim Meyer of Arizona State.

Johnson was quickly dubbed "The Freezer" because of his size, a takeoff on the Chicago Bears' No. 1 choice, William Perry, who is called "The Refrigerator." While Johnson can't be weighed on the Packers' scale, Gregg found that "he doesn't look fat. He just looks big and strong."

RON HALLSTROM: 'I Want To Be The Best'

By Jim Egle
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Take a look back at Ron Hallstrom's professional football resumé, pre-season 1984. It was littered with constant position changes, coaches who doubted his ability, newspaper stories about his lack of production.

It did not indicate that great things were to come, and indeed, Hallstrom was almost cut by the Green Bay Packers at the end of the '84 training camp. Once Hallstrom got the opportunity to start at right guard, however, two things happened: Questions were answered and critics were silenced.

With Hallstrom, questions and critics have always seemed prevalent. There was the question at his first Green Bay press conference, when a sportswriter asked Hallstrom if it was bothersome that some people had labeled him as a "stiff". Some Packer fans adopted that label, too, after Hallstrom failed to make an impression during his first two seasons with the Packers.

But after being installed in the starting lineup early in the '84 season, Hallstrom proved the cynics (coaches, fans and writers) wrong. Suddenly, the first-round washout was transformed into a standout starting guard, a player with all-pro potential.

* * *

The aforementioned turn of events seemed unlikely seven years ago, when Hallstrom was at Iowa Central Junior College. He was on the other side of the line of scrimmage, a defensive lineman, and he didn't immediately make the grade when he transferred to the University of Iowa in 1979.

Hallstrom started two games as a defensive lineman during his first season at Iowa. At mid-season, though, the Hawkeye coaching staff decided to convert Hallstrom into an offensive lineman.

He didn't play the rest of the 1979 season, and was red-shirted for 1980. The Iowa coaches made the move, Hallstrom said, because "I wasn't doing it on defense.

"I think my downfall came when we played Oklahoma. I had had a pretty good game against Nebraska, and then we played Oklahoma. J. C. Watts (Oklahoma's quarterback), I had him for about a 15-yard sack, and he spun out of it and gained about 30 yards. I think that was my downfall.

"I was told when I played in junior college that I'd probably be an offensive lineman. I got away with a lot of things in junior college because I was big. A couple (opponents) were as big as me, but the majority were mechanics, used car salesmen."

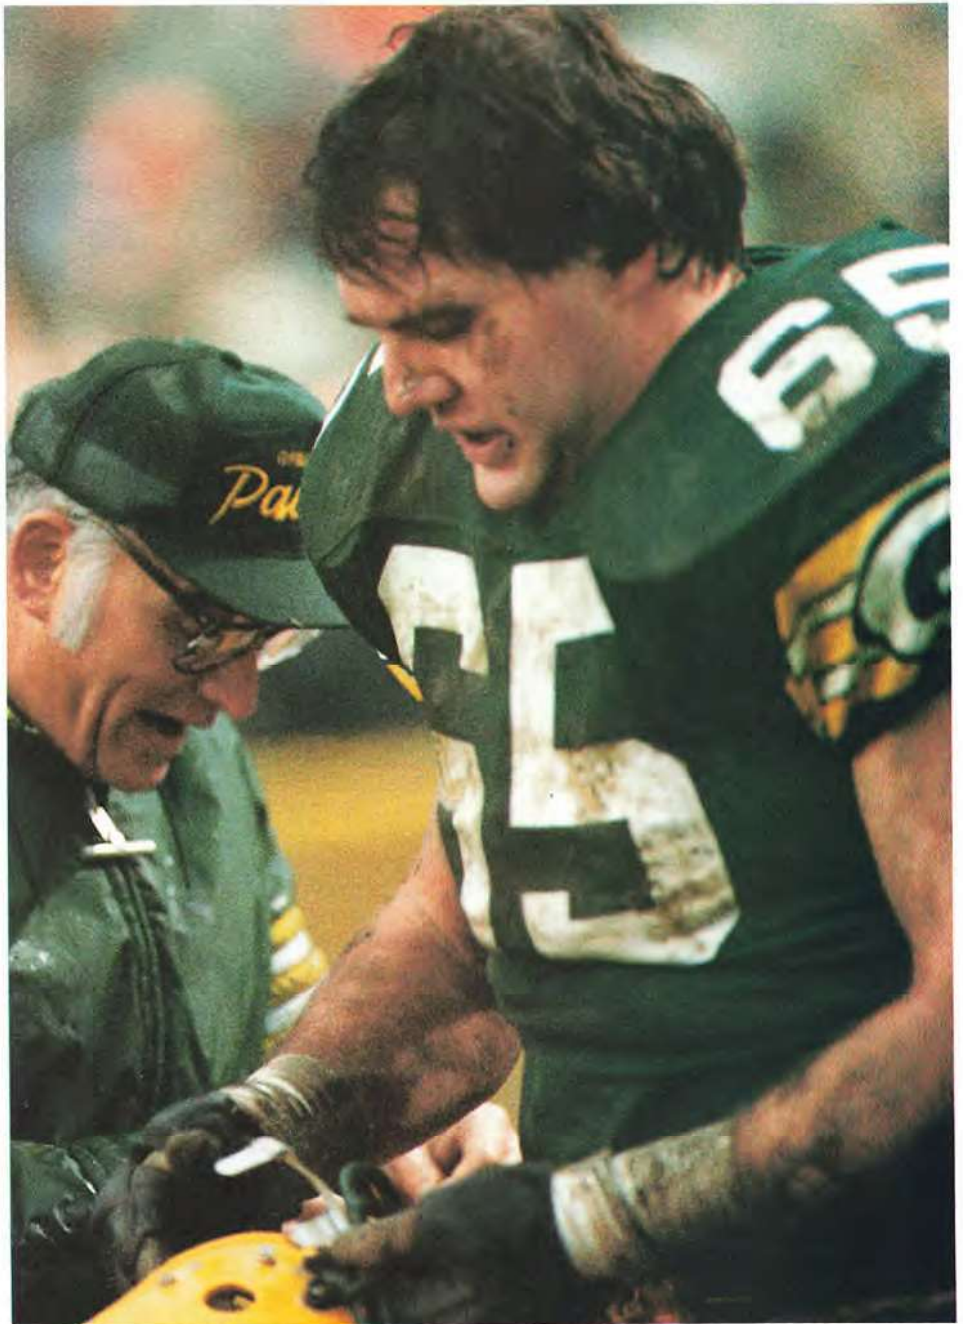

Although Hallstrom played just one year at guard for the Hawkeyes, he learned the position quickly and impressed NFL scouts. Iowa earned a trip to the Rose Bowl by winning the 1981 Big Ten title, and Hallstrom was named to several All-Big Ten teams.

He continued to look good in the post-season all-star games, and the Packers used the 22nd pick of the first round to select Hallstrom in the 1982 draft. By then, the pressure on Hallstrom had already begun to mount.

"I think it started when I started playing well late in my last year at Iowa," Hallstrom said. "Everything went so well there — I ended up starting, we played in the Rose Bowl, I got invited to play in those three post-season bowl games, and was drafted in the first round — all within a year's span. And a year before that, I wasn't even playing.

"It's not really that it (pro football) is so tough physically. You just have to realize that you're going against the best guy you went against in college every week. Mentally, it's a lot tougher. Mentally, you have to be prepared for that, and that's a big difference."

Not much went right during Hallstrom's rookie year, 1982.

He got into a fight with linebacker Kurt Allerman during training camp, and Allerman broke Hallstrom's nose. When the season started, Hallstrom was the fourth guard, behind Derrel Gofourth, Leotis Harris and Tim Huffman. Late in the year, Hallstrom overslept practice and was fined by Coach Bart Starr.

Hallstrom also had his problems with the hazing accorded rookies by veterans. Because Hallstrom was a first-round pick, he was an even more inviting target, and he admits that he didn't take it well.

"I let a lot of things get to me mentally, just little things," Hallstrom said. "I think there was a little more harassing by the veterans than there has been since I came here. But it was all things you should be able to handle."

Before Hallstrom's second season, the Packers decided to switch him to tackle. In training camp, it appeared that a three-way battle was shaping up between Hallstrom, Karl Swanke and Angelo Fields. When the season began, though, Swanke was the starting left tackle. Hallstrom was tried at right tackle and left guard that season, but didn't find a place in the lineup.

"My second year, I started gaining a little more confidence," Hallstrom said. "It was slow progress. But I'd gain a little confidence, and then I'd switch positions. Any confidence that I'd built would be thrown out the window when I switched positions."

"I came in with the attitude that I was going to learn the position and do well at it. What was frustrating was when the season started and I wasn't playing. In training camp, I was progressing. I was progressing slowly, but I was progressing. The thing of it is, I was playing so many different positions that it was hard for me to settle in."

After the '83 season, Starr was fired and his replacement, Forrest Gregg, hired Jerry Wampfler as his line coach. That seemed to bode well for Hallstrom. Both Gregg and Wampfler prefer large offensive linemen, and at 6-foot-6, 285 pounds, Hallstrom fits the bill.

Hallstrom started last season's training camp at right tackle. He played 2½ quarters in the first exhibition game, against Dallas, and acquitted himself well. In that game, however, Hallstrom pulled a muscle in his back. He continued to practice, but his stock began to slip.

"He (Wampfler) saw me in college, and I know he didn't have any confidence in me," Hallstrom said. "Which I can understand a little bit, but you've got to give a guy a chance before you start."

"He told me in the off-season that if you don't do it by your third year, and you haven't done it in the past, that by your third year you usually get released. I just figured that I had to stay there. I could have been recovering, but it wouldn't have done me any good."

"It got to the point where I couldn't strain or move. I just stayed out there, and it slowly started coming back around. By the time of the Indianapolis game, it started to get better."

The Colts' game was the exhibition season finale, and by that time Hallstrom felt there was a good chance he would be gone when the Packers reduced their roster to the 49-man limit. He had not had a chance to play, and he had not had a chance to show the new coaching staff what he could do.

But starting right tackle Greg Koch injured his back against Indianapolis. To insure themselves, the Packers kept Hallstrom.

"If Greg hadn't been hurt, I would have been cut," Hallstrom said. "I can guarantee that."

The injured Koch did not start the season opener against St. Louis, and Huffman took his place. After winning that game, though, the Packers scored just 14 points in their next two games. Gregg and Wampfler felt that a shakeup was needed in the offensive line, and replaced starters Syd Kitson and Dave Drechsler with Hallstrom and Huffman.

The move worked as well as Gregg and Wampfler could have hoped. The Packers lost their next five games, but the offensive line wasn't getting pushed around as it had been earlier in the season. Then Green Bay won seven of its last eight games.

The Packers' offensive statistics showed that the line had improved immensely. In the first half of the season, the Packers gave up 31 quarterback sacks, and gained just 3.74 yards per rushing attempt. In the second half, they allowed just 11 sacks and gained 4.86 yards a carry. Hallstrom was a major reason for the improvement.

"It's the first one (position) that I've gone to that I've felt comfortable," Hallstrom said. "I don't think it's because I was a tackle and they moved me to guard. I was a guard originally. I played guard in college, and I was comfortable there."

"When I came here, I played guard for two or three weeks, but Leotis (Harris) was doing so good that it was hard for me to get a lot of repetition. Plus, Bill Meyers (Starr's offensive line coach) was always on me about bending my knees. Mentally, that guy just drained me. He crushed me, and I never really felt comfortable anywhere I was under him."

"Then I went to left guard, and had to switch stances, then went to left tackle, then right tackle. I've always felt that the right side was the best side. I felt good at tackle. I felt confident at tackle."

"Things just worked out right. It was just so close. Who was right and who was wrong, you can't get into that. Luckily, things worked out the way they did, because I honestly believe there were no pre-conceived notions of what was going to happen."

Hallstrom can now joke about Wampfler's previous lack of faith in him. By late 1984, the Packer coaches felt that Hallstrom had displayed all-pro potential.

In a post-season interview in December, Wampfler tempered remarks about Hallstrom's ability by saying that Hallstrom has to work hard to reach the next plateau, all-pro status. But by just talking about Hallstrom's potential, Wampfler indicated how far Hallstrom had come in less than six months.

"I don't know if I was among the best (in the league)," Hallstrom said. "I think I showed some things. I want to be the best, I'll say that. Your ultimate goal is to be the best, and I would like to be that."

"But if that comes, it comes. I go along with the attitude that . . . I watch the others, and they all work hard. But I've got something they don't have. I have about 20-30 more pounds, and 3-4 more inches for a guard. If I can do what they can do, I should be able to go beyond."

"I don't want to be second-rate. I want people to remember who I am, what I did. I think that's the way you have to take the game. If you want to excel and you want to help your team and you want to do good, you have to believe you can do good."

Here's a fish-eye view of a Packer game at Green Bay's Lambeau Field — on a beautiful day.

The 1984 Season...in statistics

It Was Almost Night and Day

The Packers' 1984 season, the first under head coach Forrest Gregg, was one of the most unusual in the history of the team.

It was almost night and day. The Packers led off with a one-point (24-23) victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and then lost seven in a row. Then, without warning, the Pack finished the second half with a 7-1 record, just the reverse.

The lone loss in the second half was a 31-28 "mistake" on Thanksgiving Day in Detroit. Without that loss, the Packers would have made the playoffs instead of the Los Angeles Rams. The Packers had stopped the Rams with two field goals, 31-6, for their fourth straight win.

The Packers of 1981, coached by Bart Starr, had a similar development, posting 2-6 in the first half and then finishing with 6-2 for 8-8. Starr's 1978 team reversed, going 6-2 in the first half and then finishing 2-6.

Gregg's big problem after the opener was the loss of Lynn Dickey and Paul Coffman and once they returned the Packers lost four straight tight games by an average of slightly over four points — 30-27 in overtime to Tampa Bay, 34-28 to the San Diego Chargers, 17-14 to the Denver Broncos and 30-24 to the Seattle Seahawks.

The Monday night loss at Denver was murder. The game was played in a blizzard and the Broncos' two TDs came on returns of fumbles in the first two minutes. Despite three inches or more of snow on the ground, the Packers rolled up 423 net yards (Denver got 193) and James Lofton caught 11 passes.

The Packers broke their losing streak with great gusto, creaming the Lions in Green Bay with a 439-yard offense for a 41-9 victory. Dickey threw four touchdown passes.

For the season the Packers outscored their opponents 390 to 309 or an average of 24.3 to 19.3. This was the first time since 1972 the Packers had outscored their opponents — other than the strike season of 1982. In 1983, the Packers scored 429 points but the opponents counted 439. Both totals were new Packer records.

Probably the most exciting victory of the season was the 20-14 victory over the Bears in Chicago in Game 15. Del Rogers raced a kickoff back 97 yards in the third quarter but Bucky Scribner fumbled the snap on the extra point and the Pack had a slim 13-7 lead.

Early in the fourth quarter the Bears went ahead 14-13 following an interception of a Rich Campbell pass. Then, with 44 seconds left, Campbell and Phil Epps worked a 43-yard TD pass, with Epps running in from the nine.

Eddie Lee Ivery steps away from a Los Angeles Ram in 1984 comeback.

By Jim Hayes
Green Bay Press-Gazette

It didn't take a genius to figure out that 1984 was going to be a critical year for Eddie Lee Ivery. Injuries and personal problems threatened to end what might have been a brilliant career.

After helping the Packers reach respectability and the National Football League playoffs in 1982, Ivery admitted he had a drug problem and missed the final eight games of the 1983 season.

Ivery, a former first-round draft choice and once a fixture in the Packers' offense, had overcome major problems before. Now, the two severe knee injuries that forced him to miss two entire seasons of his professional career, were about to make a third comeback attempt much easier to deal with.

"It was a lot easier because of the fact that I came back from two knee injuries before," Ivery said. "I knew what I had to do in order to come back."

Ivery, now entering his seventh season with the Packers, did indeed make a successful comeback last year. Ivery, in fact, made such an immediate impact on the offense when he returned during the middle of last season that he probably surprised a lot of people (and even some teammates) who had written him off.

Ivery's return began when he completed a stay at the Hazelden Foundation, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center near Minneapolis. Ivery, even though everything seemed stacked against him, said he never doubted he would make it back to pro football.

"I've gone through a lot of things," Ivery said. "I just knew down inside of me that I wanted to play football. With the God given talent I have, I didn't want to give it up yet."

Ivery began his first season under Coach Forrest Gregg on a bad note. He showed up at the team's veteran minicamp grossly out of shape before a strenuous training regimen enabled him to get back down to his playing weight of 208 pounds.

EDDIE LEE IVERY

A Different Type of Runner

"It was a setback to me," Ivery said. "I was in the worst condition that I had been in during my six years with the Packers. I just dedicated myself to getting down to my playing weight. I met with Coach Gregg and knew what was expected of me."

Ivery reported to training camp last season behind Gerry Ellis on the depth chart at halfback. Things remained that way the entire camp, even though Ivery led the team in carries during the pre-season.

Ivery received his first real test in an exhibition game against the Indianapolis Colts at Lambeau Field. Ivery carried 13 times for 46 yards and caught three passes for 14 yards.

"Early in training camp you could tell he was coming back," said running back coach George Sefcik. "There was one stretch during the pre-season when we as a staff had to make up our mind whether or not he could still play."

Ivery survived the final roster reduction but was placed on the injured reserve list a few days before the first regular-season game with a lingering knee injury.

"I was totally disappointed," Ivery said. "But what I think Coach Gregg had in mind was the best for the team as a whole and the best for me. For me to go in at 70 to 85 percent, I would have hurt the team more than I would have helped."

Ivery spent the first five weeks of the season on injured reserve before being activated Oct. 6. He sat on the bench the next three weeks as the Packers lost seven of their first eight games.

Ivery, almost a forgotten man the first eight weeks of the season, played extensively the following week against Detroit. Ivery carried nine times for 116 yards and broke a 49-yard gain. After being one of the Packers' biggest question marks for months, Ivery once again was a productive and valuable member of the offense.

"I was definitely pumped up to play," Ivery said. "I think I was mentally ready to play three games prior to that. I kept myself mentally in the games when I was on the sideline and I think that made a difference."

Sefcik agrees that Ivery had prepared himself: "When your name's called you have to be ready. He was ready and he performed. Once a guy has a great day you can't wait to play him again the next game."

With Ivery playing the leading role, the Packers rushed for 1,274 yards and averaged 4.9 yards a carry during the second half of the season. During the first half, the Packers had gained just 745 yards, while averaging an anemic 3.7 yards per carry.

Ivery's statistics were outstanding. He gained 552 yards in eight games to finish with a 5.6 average. Ellis led the team in rushing with 581 yards, but played in twice as many games as Ivery did.

With Ivery contributing solid efforts, the Packers rushed for 209 yards and 208 yards in back-to-back games against New Orleans and Minnesota. It was the first time since 1972 that the Packers had rushed for over 200 yards in consecutive games.

"I knew what I had to do to prepare myself," Ivery said. "When I was on injured reserve in the early part of the season I kept myself in shape and kept going to the weight room. I worked real hard."

Because of his performance last season, Ivery entered training camp this summer as the starting halfback. Ellis came to camp as the No. 1 fullback, although Jessie Clark also is expected to see a great deal of playing time.

Sefcik, probably more than anyone, realizes Ivery's importance to the running game. Ivery has played just one full season since the Packers drafted him in 1979, and Sefcik and Ivery would like nothing better than to see a healthy Ivery play another full season.

"We hope he can start out and have a complete year like the way he ended last year," Sefcik said. "Every year is a new year and you have to prove yourself each year. We sure hope he can. It's up to him. If he works as hard as he did last year he can have a good year."

Ivery is the first to admit that he's not the same type of runner he was before an injury to his left knee in his first game forced him to miss his entire rookie season. Ivery came back to gain 831 yards in 1980 (his only actual full season as a pro) before another injury to the same knee in 1981 caused him to miss another full season.

Despite his physical setbacks, Ivery is confident he can still end up with a productive career.

"I think the goal of every running back is to be all-pro or to go to the Pro Bowl," he said. "Every running back would like to be a member of the Gerry Ellis - back at fullback.

1,000-yard club. I have yet to receive one of those honors, but they're still in my plans."

Ivery feels his knees are as good as they can be, considering what his injuries have been. His speed is not what it was when he entered the league, but is better than average among NFL backs, according to Sefcik.

To make up for loss of speed, Ivery seemed to have improved his quickness last season. Ivery was quick to hit holes, and that enabled him to break through an improved offensive line.

"He has great vision," Sefcik said. "He can see the entire field. He knows where he's going to run with the football."

"He may lack a little bit of speed because of his knee injuries, which hurts, but he sure did a good job for us. By no means, though, is he slow."

One of Ivery's better qualities last season was his ability to find the end zone. Ivery, usually a dependable goal-line runner, scored seven touchdowns to rank third on the team in scoring.

"I don't think I can be stopped from one yard," Ivery said. "I love getting the ball when we're inside the five-yard line. I pray to get it then."

Ivery's personal problems have made him more visible whenever he steps on the field. "It surely hasn't helped him any," Sefcik said. "He's put a lot more pressure on himself to perform on the football field."

Ivery says he has learned to accept the fact that his mistakes probably draw more attention than those of his teammates.

"That's the case anytime you have problems," he said. "People are going to be critical of you one way or another. It's just that we're all human and we're going to make errors."

Ivery, despite his hardships, has enjoyed his career in Green Bay and is glad the Packers were the team that drafted him. He even feels that Packer fans have played a role in his comebacks.

"They've been very supportive of me in my six years in Green Bay," Ivery said. "They're one of the reasons why I've been able to make my comebacks."

The Packers showed some faith in Ivery and the other holdover running backs when they didn't select a back until the seventh round of the 1985 draft, when their choice was Gary Ellerson, a product of the University of Wisconsin.

"I think Forrest and the staff felt good about the people we have," Sefcik said. "It wasn't one of our major needs, but I think anytime we picked, if the best player available was a running back, we probably would have considered taking him."

Ellis started the first 11 games at halfback last year before moving to fullback. He was shifted to fullback when Clark was forced to miss the last five games with a torn muscle in his upper arm.

Sefcik said Offensive Coordinator Bob Schnelker plans to rotate Ivery, Ellis and Clark on a regular basis. "It's our system and Bob Schnelker believes in that," Sefcik said. "Because we have three backs of their caliber you feel safe with any of them out there."

Ellis has played extensively at both halfback and fullback during his five years with the Packers. Sefcik doesn't feel Ellis has been slowed at all because he has switched from position to position a couple of times.

"I don't think it hurts," Sefcik said. "He's extremely smart and he's able to handle both positions. In our system the positions are about the same. The differences are not as drastic as they might be in some other systems."

Packer Sidelights - on and off the field

James Lofton made one of his spectacular catches against the St. Louis Cardinals in game 1 in 1984. Defending on the 48-yard gain were Leonard Smith (45) and Lionel Washington.

The six Packer helmets show vividly the Pack's gang tackling against the Chicago Bears. Could Walter Payton be under the pile?

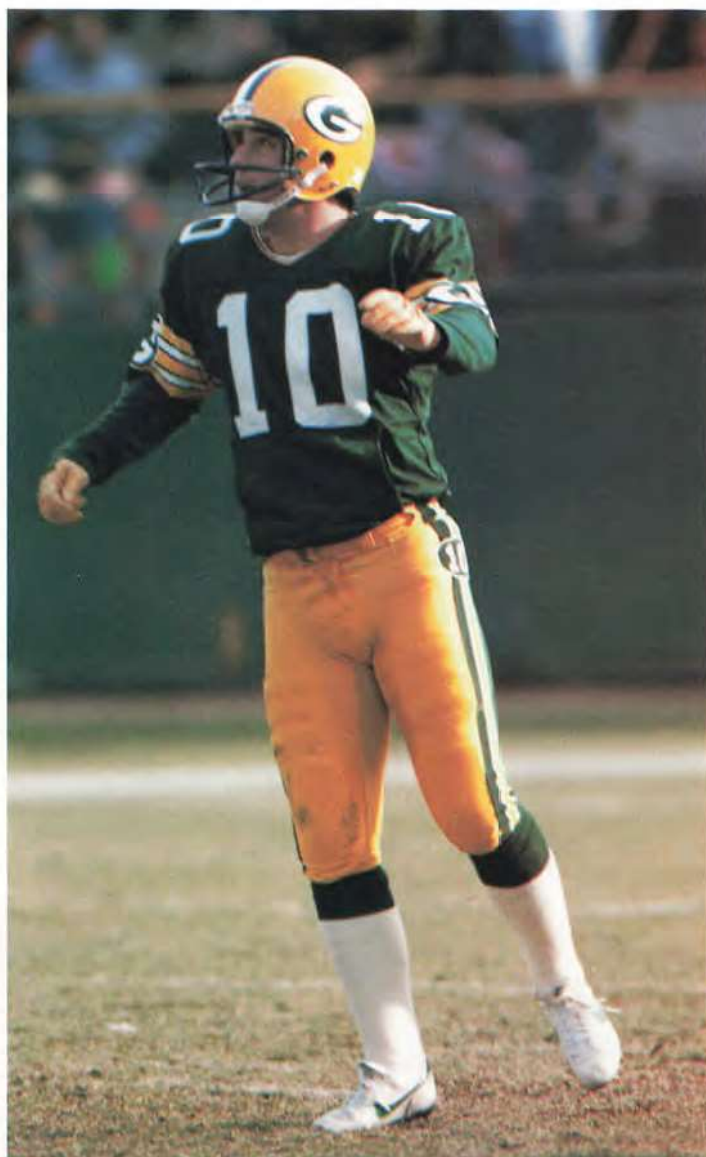

AL . . . Al Del Greco, like a knight in shining armor, came to the rescue of the Packers' place-kicking game in 1984. And, hopefully, he'll repeat his .750 field goal ratio in 1985.

A rookie out of Auburn, who lost in a bid with veteran Uwe von Schamann for the Miami Dolphins' kicking job, Del Greco replaced Eddie Garcia after the Packers' seventh game. Garcia trailed off badly earlier in the season and the last straw was missing short 29 and 30-yard field goals in a 17-14 loss at Denver.

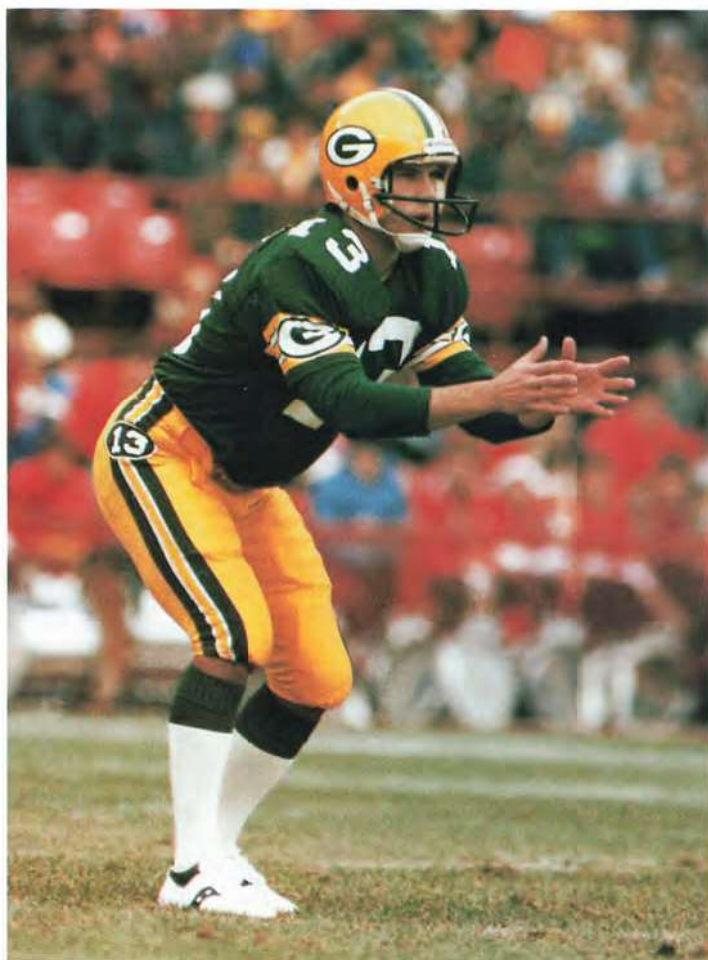

Del Greco came on strong, making good on his first eight field goal attempts. The string included three important FGs in New Orleans. His try for No. 9 was a 54-yarder and it fell short vs. the Los Angeles Rams.

For the season Del Greco hit nine of 12 field goal attempts. He was listed with two missed extra point kicks but one resulted from a bad snap.

A cool cat, Del Greco says he is not bothered by the pressure of a key kick. A scratch golfer, he feels there is more pressure standing over a six-foot putt.

Al Del Greco watches field goal attempt.

Bucky Scribner awaits snap from center.

BUCKY . . . Bucky Scribner met a stern test in his sophomore season with the Packers in 1984. He was called on for 85 punts and responded with an average of 42.3 yards. His average ranked third in the National Conference and eighth in the NFL.

Only Brian Hansen of New Orleans and Greg Coleman of Minnesota ranked ahead of him in the National Conference but they both punted in domed stadiums.

The first left-footed Packer punter since Randy Walker in 1974, Scribner had an impressive net average of 36.6 and only three punters in the league topped that figure — Reggie Roby of Miami, 37.5; Jim Arnold of Kansas City, 37.5; and Rohn Stark of Indianapolis, 37.2.

Scribner beat out Ray Stachowicz for the Packers' punting job in 1983 and finished with an average of 41.6 on 69 boots in his rookie season. Scribner was an 11th draft choice out of Kansas. ©

How Packers Were Built

The 1985 edition of "How Packers Were Built" reveals that Coach Forrest Gregg, in his first year at the Packer helm, leaned heavily on the college player draft and the free agent mart.

Nine of the 12 drafted players made the roster for one or more league games — an unusually high figure. Eight free agents were also added. Thus, Gregg's first production had 19 new faces. Here's how the Packers were built through 1984 but, of course, these athletes will be highly challenged this year by a new crop of draftees and free agents:

Here are the covers of the first two Super Bowl programs. It wasn't called a Super Bowl then.

Super Bowl Double X Coming Up

Back on Jan. 15, 1967 when the Packers and Kansas City Chiefs squared off in the first Super Bowl, the thought of the 20th Super Bowl seemed centuries away.

Well, gang, centuries have passed! Super Bowl XX is just a few months down the road — Jan. 26, 1986 in the Louisiana Superdome.

The Super Bowl has grown into the biggest one-day spectacle in all of sports. For three or four hours on Super Bowl Sunday anybody vaguely interested in sports stops and watches. Millions and millions of people see the game via television worldwide.

Yet, when the Packers and Chiefs fought in that first contest, it wasn't officially known as the Super Bowl. It was called "World Championship Game, AFL vs. NFL."

The game carried the same title when the Packers and Oakland Raiders teed it up in Super Bowl II. It wasn't until the third game between the New York Jets and Baltimore Colts that the affair was officially called a Super Bowl.

The Super Bowl, of course, resulted from the merger of the 14-team NFL and the eight-team AFL in 1967. The NFL was split into the National and American Football Conferences. Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Baltimore joined the AFC to make the merger official in 1970 and New Orleans and Atlanta franchises were added to make two 13-team conferences. Tampa Bay and Seattle were added in 1977.

The term "Super Bowl" has been called the creation of Lamar Hunt, owner of the Chiefs and president of the AFC. He got the idea from a Super Chief railroad toy he had given his children. Reference had been made to the first game as a Super Bowl in various publications, including the 1967 Green Bay Packer Yearbook.

The first two Super Bowl teams were pretty much the opposites. The Packers were hot stuff in the NFL in the 1960s, having won the NFL titles in 1961, 1962 and 1965-7. Kansas City had finished 7-5-2 in 1965 and won the West in 1966 with 11-2-1. The Packers were 10-3-1 in 1965 and 12-2 in 1966.

Green Bay got to the Super Bowl I by downing Dallas 34-27 and Kansas City made it by whipping the Buffalo Bills 31-7.

The Packers were favored in the Big One but the score was only 14-10, Green Bay, at halftime. The late Buddy Young, onetime star halfback in the NFL, said during the intermission: "I'm worried. They're (Chiefs) a good team." A sportswriter added: "The only difference I can see between the NFL and AFC is Bart Starr."

The Packers, carrying the weight of the NFL on their minds, owned the second half. They went after Chief QB Len Dawson and forced an interception by Willie Wood that turned the game around. Wood returned the steal 50 yards and the Packers quickly went 21-10 up. From then on it was no contest and it ended 35 to 10. Starr was named the most valuable player.

That was 19 Super Bowls ago. How about the Packers and Chiefs playing in Game XX? They're both in the long-shot category but anything can happen. They each displayed playoff possibilities in posting 8-8 records in 1984.

The main reason they're not on the street, is the Boys and Girls Club on the block.

Growing up is hard enough. The streets don't make it any easier. A kid needs a place to grow besides the street. And next to home, there's no place like a Boys and Girls Club.

You see, a Boys and Girls Club really is more than just a club. It's a place where a kid connects with the promise of a future. No wonder over 1,200,000 kids keep coming to 1,100 Boys and Girls Club facilities all across America.

Beating the streets isn't easy. But with the help of a strong Boys and Girls Club, a kid has much more than a fighting chance.

Packers Have Never Beaten Dolphins

The Packers have never beaten the Miami Dolphins.

Of course, they've only played three games but it does seem a little odd that proud old Green Bay has been shut out by one of the National Football League's relative newcomers, the 19-year-old Dolphins.

What's worse, Green Bay was clobbered pretty good by Miami, 85 points to 20, on losses of 27-6 in Miami in 1971, 31-7 in Green Bay in 1975 and 27-7 in Miami in 1979.

The point of this little look at the Packers' 1985 schedule is that the Packers will get a chance to post No. 1 vs. Miami when the two teams collide in Game 14 in Green Bay Dec. 8.

Playing Super Bowl finalist Miami means that the Packers will be opposing one of the most successful coaches in the NFL — Don Shula, who in 15 seasons at Miami has compiled a 156-59-2 (.723) record, with five Super Bowl appearances and two SB victories.

Shula isn't unfamiliar with the Pack. He coached the Baltimore Colts for seven seasons, starting in 1963, before going to Miami in 1970. A young coach just removed from player status, Shula managed five wins in 12 starts vs. Green Bay. One of the Packers' wins was a Divisional Playoff in 1965 and one of the Pack's star players in that period was Forrest Gregg, now in his second year as Packer head coach.

Gregg has coached three games against Shula. In 1976, Gregg's Browns beat Miami 17-16 in Cleveland. Gregg's Bengals lost 17-16 in Miami in 1980 and 38-14 in Miami in 1983.

Ironically, the Dolphins will be the second straight Florida opponent to make a December visit to Green Bay. On the previous Sunday the Tampa Bay Buccaneers will invade Lambeau Field. Two weeks after Miami's visit the Packers close the season at Tampa Bay.

The Packers play eight games (home and home) with their Central Division foes — the Bears, Bucs, Vikings and Lions; four with NFC teams — Rams, Giants, Cardinals and Saints; and four with teams of the AFC East — Patriots, Jets, Colts and Dolphins.

Green Bay is home for four of the first six games and three of the last six. The Packers have been assigned a rugged road opener — the Patriots at Foxboro, always a stickler in the AFC East. This is followed by two home 3 o'clock starts — the Giants in Green Bay and Jets in Milwaukee. The next three find the Pack at St. Louis and home to the Lions and Vikings.

The only "bug" of the schedule follows — two games with the Central champion Bears in three weeks. Thus, it is important for the Pack to get off to a good start.

The Bear action starts on a Monday night in Chicago Oct. 21 and this is followed by a trip to Indianapolis. A week later the Bears visit Green Bay for Game 9, the start of the second half.

The Packers' first five road games, covering the first 10 games, will be played on artificial turf — at New England, St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis and Minnesota. The only road grass games will be at Los Angeles Rams and Tampa Bay. Seventeen teams in the NFL have artificial turf and 11 have grass.
